U.S. to Brace Currencies Of Friendly Nations

$2,000,000,000 Made Available; $100,000,000 Loan To China Approved

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

Secretary Morgenthau indicated yesterday that under a new policy the Treasury's $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, unused for months, will become a diplomatic "war chest" to support the economies of friendly nations from China to Latin America.

Admission of the new policy followed shortly after a joint Senate-House Currency Committee had approved unanimously a transaction by which the United States will advance the Chinese Chungking government $100,000,000.

Secretary Hull outlined to 12 members of the Senate Banking Committee and 6 members of the House Coinage Committee a general policy of aid to the Chiang Kai-shek government.

Morgenthau Explains

Secretary Morgenthau followed with a detailed explanation of how the Treasury proposes to support China's currency.

Under the terms of an agreement announced Saturday, the Export-Import Bank will credit China with $50,000,000 against metals to be imported later, and the Treasury will release $50,000,000 from its stabilization fund to support the Chinese currency, the yuan.

At a press conference that followed his appearance on Capitol Hill Secretary Morgenthau told reporters that the Treasury's intention to support China's currency marks the start of a new policy.

He declined to say that the policy would be next applied in Latin America, but other Treasury quarters said that such a development may be expected.

Idle Since 1939

It was freely predicted that Argentina, which has a financial mission now in Washington, will be the next nation to benefit by the new stabilization fund policy.

The nest egg of $2,000,000,000 has been virtually idle since the start of the European war in September, 1939, severely limited transactions

Hospital Patient Dies in Plunge From 7th Floor

An Emergency Hospital patient was killed early this morning when he fell or jumped from his seventh story room to the terrace in front of the hospital, 1700 New York Avenue Northwest.

Victim of the fall is James A. George, 55, of 1 Second Street Northeast, a Library of Congress employe. His body was discovered by a nurse, who heard the impact of the fall. George had entered the hospital November 29 for treatment of an internal disorder.

Public Opinion Of Dies' Efforts

Rep. Dies has charged that forces both inside and outside the Government are combining in a plot to "scuttle" his committee's investigation of Fifth Columnists in this country. Do the voters favor a continuation of the Dies Committee? See the Gallup Poll in Wednesday's Post.

Neediest Families

Breadwinners Ill, Bleak Yule Confronts Children in 2 Homes

By Lucia Giddens.

A World War veteran has struggled alone to make a home for his six small children since the death of his wife a year ago. But illness and other misfortunes make this family one of the neediest in Washington this Christmas—unless help comes through The Post's fund.

How to Help

Make out check to The Washington Post's Neediest Families Fund. In corner of check, you may designate by number the family which you wish to help. Cash contributions may be dropped in a box on the counter near the entrance of The Post, 1337 E Street Northwest.

The difficult situations in two of the neediest families are described today in The Post. Readers are urged to study their plight, and then to send contributions promptly to The Post's fund, which will give these families not only a Christmas celebration but a new start on the way to regaining their independence.

Family No. 3

Mr. S., the war veteran, was left a widower with six children under 12 years of age. He did not want to break up his home, and was able to keep his family together when his mother-in-law moved into the home.

But Mr. S. had to go to the hospital with severe arthritis. With the removal of his teeth, the arthritis condition cleared up. He is now at home and is able to do light work. But he has not been able to find even that.

He hopes to be assigned to a WPA job as a laborer before long, for he has not been trained for a trade. However, when,

G.O.P. to Seek Cut of 2 Billions In U. S. Budget

Campaign to Reduce Nondefense Spending To Begin on WPA Bill

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

House Republicans plan to "test" the Administration's nonmilitary economy program by proposing cuts ranging upward to $2,000,000,000 in the regular expenses of Government.

Representative John Taber, of New York, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, said he will submit amendments to the next Congress on behalf of the minority to bring an aggregate slash of that amount under this year's nondefense spending.

Taber said House Republicans would support "anything needed for National Defense" but would scrutinize regular governmental spending for every possible saving.

He estimated the $2,000,000,000 could be lopped off the nonmilitary budget "without any hardships" and that the 1942 WPA appropriation for relief, as defense measures take up the job slack, can be held to $500,000,000.

The man House Minority Leader Martin placed in charge of Republican appropriations policies said the G. O. P. drive for economies will open when WPA presents deficiency estimates for this fiscal year.

The $975,000,000 appropriation on which WPA is operating was designed to last a minimum of eight months, with $500,000,000 more originally foreseen as necessary to complete the relief year. Taber said he will ask that the WPA deficiency be held to $200,000,000.

Taber cited the President's proposal to cut nonmilitary public

House Passes Walter-Logan Bill, 176 to 51

Bare Quorum Present For Ballot Veto Expected for Measure

By John [illegible]
Post Staff Writer

The House yesterday gave final approval to the Walter-Logan bill, and settled back to wait for an expected Presidential veto.

The measure, already passed by the Senate, cannot be sent to the White House before Thursday—with the result that the President will have at least until December 16 to disapprove it. Even should there be sufficient time in the present session, it is not considered likely that a veto would be overriden in the Senate.

Action of the House yesterday was taken with a bare quorum of members answering their names in the roll call. The vote was 176 to 51, nine more than the necessary total of 218.

The measure, which has been under spasmodic Congressional consideration for two and a half years, is intended to restrict the powers of various Federal agencies—prime examples including the National Labor Relations Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Bitterly opposed by the Administration, the bill was fought in yesterday's brief debate by a handful of members, including Democratic Representatives Cochran, of Missouri; Dingell, of Michigan; Thomas Ford, of California, and Rankin, of Mississippi.

Chairman Sumners, of the Judiciary Committee, and Representative Walter, of Pennsylvania, Democrats, supported the measure, but a number of other members obtained leave to "revise and extend" their remarks in the Record.

Chest Expects $85,000 in Gifts To Put It at 95% of Goal

Gifts and pledges to the Community Chest totaling between $85,000 and $95,000 are expected to be made public today at the concluding report luncheon at the Willard Hotel.

Chest officials said last night they believed the final tabulation would show approximately $1,900,000, or 95 per cent of the $2,000,000 quota, has been raised during the three-week campaign.

"Chances are excellent for a very good report," said Herbert L. Willett, jr., Chest director. He warned, however, that the additional $100,000 is needed to go over the top and that Washingtonians believe "we can't afford to fall down in this effort."

Some of the still-needed funds probably will be obtained, he added, from givers who are ill or out of the city or from Chest supporters who will increase their previous gifts and pledges.

"Volunteer solicitors are still enthusiastically at work," Paul D. Sleeper, chairman of the Metropolitan Unit, stated.

He said his workers have been "working early and late," but remarked it was "very difficult to have any idea what they will bring in."

Encouraging reports also were expected by A. G. Neal, chairman of the Group Solicitation Unit.

"We will probably have a very substantial sum to report," he declared.

Convoy Attacked West of Eire; Action Laid to Surface Raider

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 2.—Underseas raiders struck at a convoy of merchant vessels about 500 miles west of Ireland today, torpedoing seven, possibly eight, ships, while two other ships—one of them only 25 miles from Ireland—were bombed from the air.

Distress signals were heard by Mackay Radio over a 14-hour period until silence veiled the convoy's fate. At least one ship was sunk, as indicated by the presence of survivors aboard another torpedoed vessel.

During that time, planes bombed the 378-foot British trawler Kilgerran Castle 15 miles [illegible] of Inisalehead, Ireland, and the 34-year-old Yugoslavian freighter Cetvrti, 1,357 tons, 150 miles to the south.

Convoy's Size Undetermined

It was midnight in the new "Graveyard of the North Atlantic" when Mackay heard the first SSS, indicating a submarine attack, flashed by an unidentified vessel.

Later calls indicated this was but the first blow on a convoy of unknown size (convoys of 25 to 30 ships are not uncommon). Those ships identified in the stricken convoy all trade with the Caribbean or pass through the Panama Canal to the United States west coast and Far Eastern ports.

Freighter Torpedoed

The blow was indicated as covering a course of about 250 miles, which led to speculation in marine circles that the attacking vessels might include an auxiliary cruiser or surface warship.

Marine circles said submarines cannot cover 250 miles in five hours—the indicated length of the attack—and concluded the raiders were

British Food Ships To Be in Offensive

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Dec. 2.—Lord Woolton, minister of food, announced today that ships now bringing food are to be diverted so that they may take part in a "coming great offensive" against Italy.

"We have to carry our forces overseas—and overseas is the proper place for Britain to be at war," he declared.

"We have had a standard of life in this country up till now that the rest of Europe has envied. But now we are going into the offensive."

Magyars Intern Soldier Refugees From Iron Guard Terrorism

By the United Press

Budapest, Dec. 2.—Frontier reports today said that Rumanian army officers and soldiers, fleeing from Iron Guardist rioting and mutiny, had crossed into Hungary, where they surrendered and were disarmed.

This followed German reports that General Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel, chief of the German supreme command, had been dispatched to Rumania by Adolf Hitler to suppress terroristic disorders.

Between 60,000 and 75,000 additional German troops, comprising four or five divisions, were reported in military circles to have arrived in the past two weeks under screen of the nation's disorders.

Thrust East Expected

Informed quarters suspected the new troop movements might be connected with a forthcoming Nazi move eastward and southward, rather than with suppression of the Rumanian disorders, inasmuch as Adolf Hitler for a month has had enough troops there to deal with such internal troubles if necessary.

In this connection the "tourist" traffic to Albania was reported increasing steadily, although these tourists were not definitely identified as Germans.

Nazis Speed Through Hungary

By the Associated Press

Mateszalka, Hungary, at the Rumanian Border, Dec. 2.—Troop trains bearing long-fresh German divisions to Rumania sped through Hungary today under circumstances suggesting that Germany was preparing to halt the disorders sweeping parts of that country unless the Rumanians themselves acted effectively.

These Nazi fighting men—numbering perhaps 60,000—entered Hungary by way of Slovakia. They will supplement heavy German forces already quartered in Rumania and guarding the Rumanian pipelines and oil fields which are so vital to the German war machine.

(These forces have been estimated as high as 500,000.)

A German motorized division paraded today through Bucharest streets, with young King Mihai of Rumania following along behind.

Over the stand from which Premier Ion Antonescu, Iron Guard Chieftain Horia Sima and German generals reviewed the parade there swept more than 50 German warplanes in show maneuvers.

The people of the city stood silent before the German companies, but

Verdi Opera Opens Metropolitan's Beautified Season

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—The Metropolitan Opera went democratic tonight for the first time in its 55-year history—but the opening night looked just the same.

Verdi's "The Masked Ball" was supposed to be the attraction, and was to a certain extent, partly because it is new to this generation of opera-goers. It has not been given since 1916.

But there was the usual neck-twisting to see the bejeweled society leaders as they made their entrances.

In fact, it was all just as though the people had not snatched the old house from the realtors by subscribing a million dollars last spring to enable the operating company, to make a down payment on the theater, and spend half a million on cosmetics for the auditorium itself, including a new curtain of gold cloth to replace the 36-year-old dust cloth which used to hide Caruso.

Among the opera-goers, Ganna Walska, the singer, wore a triple rope of diamonds and emeralds around her neck and a silver fox cape of almost knee length. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt appeared, resplendent in salmon-colored lame gown and a crimson velvet wrap. Mrs. George Washington Kavanaugh, known as New York's most glamorous grandmother, wore a gown shimmering with brilliants, and a white fox fur wrap.

For Brighter Future

Pan-Europe Leader Urges New World Aid to Britain

Speedier Delivery of Planes Will Help Win War, Count Says

Count Coudenhove-Kalergi, president of the Pan European Union, yesterday outlined a four-point program leading "toward a brighter future for America, Europe and the world."

The nobleman, whose father was for many years Austro-Hungarian charge d'affaires in Tokyo, but who now lives on an estate in Switzerland, came to this country by clipper in August. He is accompanied by Countess Coudenhove-Kalergi, who as Ida Roland was a star in the Imperial Theater in Vienna until the Nazis moved in.

After discussing the "catastrophe" that is inevitable if Nazism and Bolshevism triumph in Europe, Count Coudenhove-Kalergi outlined his plan for saving western civilization. It follows:

1. American material aid to Great Britain, particularly in the form of planes that will help Britain gain mastery of Europe's skies.

2. To unite the world of Western civilization by organizing Pan America and Pan Europe and by linking them in a union

President Sails On Caribbean Voyage Today

Roosevelt to Board Cruiser at Miami for Gulf-Stream Cruise

By Frank L. Kluckhohn
Copyright by New York Times

Aboard President Roosevelt's Special Train en Route to Miami, Dec. 2.—President Roosevelt will board the cruiser Tuscaloosa at Miami tomorrow for a combination recreation and official voyage that will take him deep into the Caribbean and keep him away from Washington until December 16.

Despite maintenance of official secrecy about his eventual destination and itinerary, it was understood the President plans to inspect one or more of the island bases recently acquired from Great Britain and to take part in naval maneuvers off Culebra Island near Puerto Rico. Jamaica, Trinidad and the Bahamas, where the Duke of Windsor is governor and his American duchess the first lady, were mentioned as among the base sites Mr. Roosevelt may visit.

On this special train carrying the Chief Executive on his first long trip away from the Nation's Capital since before the start of the election campaign, aides, however, discussed fishing prospects seriously. The impression gained ground that pursuit of deep sea denizens with rod and reel might play as large a part in the Gulf Stream odyssey as more weighty matters.

Accompanying the President were Admiral Ross T. McIntyre, his personal physician, and Harry L. Hopkins, former Secretary of Commerce, in addition to naval and military aides. Besides the U. S. S. Tuscaloosa, with the Commander in Chief's banner ready to unfurl, there are awaiting at Miami two of the Navy's latest destroyers, which will accompany the cruiser Police described the shooting—discovered by Mrs. Mitchell—as an apparent suicide.

Plan of 'Totalitarian Woman'

FBI Thwarts Plot to Get Defense Secrets by Use of Pretty Girls

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has thwarted the plan of "a prominent society woman from a totalitarian country" to seduce Army, Navy, and Government officials by the use of pretty girls and gambling and to draw from them America's defense secrets.

This woman's plot, said "to have been nipped in the bud," was disclosed by Inspector L. R. Pennington, assistant to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, in a speech to the National Stevedores Association yesterday at the Washington Hotel.

At the evening session the delegates drank a solemn toast to "His Majesty the King of England," after hearing Lord Marley, deputy speaker of the British House of Lords, declare that "the sky will be the limit" in British demands for American aid.

The woman, Inspector Pennington said, while describing the F. B. I.'s activities against subversive activities, had rented a house and was preparing to secure beautiful girls and elaborate gambling facilities—all aimed at entrapping persons in possession of important defense information.

The Army, Navy and State Departments were duly warned, he said.

Associate members were urged by the inspector to notify FBI branch offices of any suspected attempts at sabotage or other subversive activi-

Dies Sees Plane Plant Sabotage In Test Crash

5 Acts of Tampering Found, 6th Case 'Probably' Undetected

Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, appealing for a continuation of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, said last night that at least "five separate acts of sabotage" had been committed on "a most important experimental plane" at an undisclosed factory.

Declining to name the plane, plant or time of the incident, Dies said in an address prepared for the radio that the five acts were discovered before the plane left the ground, but that there was a subsequent "crack up" of the ship.

"It is highly probable that a sixth act of sabotage which went undiscovered was the cause of the plane's destruction," Dies said. "The plant's inspector warned against the plane's leaving the ground, and when his warning went unheeded, he demanded a transfer out of the experimental department."

Citing this example to illustrate "the extreme urgency" of expelling Fifth Columnists from defense industries, Dies remarked that a recent committee investigation disclosed

Brooklyn Professor Says 9 on Faculty Were Communists

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—An assistant professor at Brooklyn College testified today that he and eight other faculty members joined the Communist Party in 1935 and assumed aliases to conceal their identities.

Dr. Bernard D. N. Grebanier told a joint legislative committee investigating the City's school system that he took the name of "David Arden" when he joined the party "because there would be no peace if the person's real name were used."

His testimony followed an assertion by Paul Windels, chief committee counsel, that there had been deliberate use of New York City's school system to spread subversive doctrines as well as efforts by certain faculty members to obstruct exposure of such activities.

Rep. Eberharter Quits D. C. Group

Many Spoils Taken

By the Associated Press

Athens (Tuesday), Dec. 3.—Collapse of Italy's central defense line in Albania with the mass surrender of 5,000 Fascist troops was combined with new strategic gains in the south near the coast to precipitate another disorganized Italian retreat on a 100-mile front, a Greek government spokesman said early today.

Greek mountain troops hurled defenders back to new heights near Relvino, about 25 miles northeast of the seaport of Santi Quaranta (or Porto Edda, as Premier Mussolini named it in honor of his daughter, Edda, after his Albanian conquest).

This southern success threatened further to cut off Italian troops in that seaport area, the Greeks said.

The Greek high command in its latest communique today said the road from Santa Quaranta to the main southern Italian base at Argirocastro already was under Greek fire.

Besides the 5,000 reported in military dispatches from the central front, the government spokesman said another 150 prisoners were captured by Greeks advancing in the Aoos River region, near Premet.

Additional Italian equipment also was taken.

The Greek spokesman made this summary of the latest military

French Border Greeting To Greeks Irks Italy

The Italian government has delivered a protest to the French government at Vichy, a well-informed traveler, just returned from Europe, told The Post yesterday.

Subject of the protest is a sign erected at a strategic spot along the Franco-Italian frontier.

The sign reads:

Center Defense Line Of Italians Smashed

Greeks Take 5,000 Prisoners, Pursue Disorderly Retreat

"In the course of today the Italians continued to retreat.

"The most important retreat was on our left wing, where the enemy retreated to the heights around Delvino and has passed, in depth, Santi Quaranta.

"More to the north in the River Aoos region our troops are fighting with the same courage as that which enabled them to capture Pogradetz, and have captured a summit 2,145 meters high (about 7,000 feet) on Politzani Mountain. There the Italians were strongly established and hoped to remain.

Fight Near Pogradetz

"More to the north in the region of Premet the enemy retreated to villages and heights to the northeast and left 150 prisoners in the hands of our troops.

"In the Pogradetz region the enemy tried to cover his retreat by defending himself in the northeastern heights but we hope to dislodge him from these heights also. During these operations our troops captured ten guns, 50 machine guns, trench mortars and all sorts of war material which will be useful to us."

Describing the surrender of 5,000 Italians, by far the largest number of Benito Mussolini's men captured at one time, the Greeks declared. The Italian commander on the central front sent word over that he had had enough. Greek troops, fearing a trap, warily encircled the Fascists.

Then began the roundup and the march of the 5,000 to the rear to join more than 8,000 Italians the Greeks previously have reported captured in the 36-day-old war.

"The victory, without exaggeration, is of exceptional importance," the account from the front said, "for the enemy line in this sector has been destroyed and all danger eliminated for us.

"The psychological effect of the surrender was such that it broke enemy resistance in the area and led to a hasty, precipitous retreat. One after another the Italian columns abandoned their positions, leaving behind all sorts of equipment in large quantities.

Elite Troops Routed

"Seventeen captured Italian officers disclosed that elite Italian legions, which had taken part in the Spanish Civil War, had taken part in the defense of this area and were retreating in disorder."

Prior to the reported break in the center of the line, the Greeks pictured the battlefront as swinging like a barn door toward the Adriatic from a hinge on the Adriatic coast of Albania, just north of the Greek frontier, to Lake Ochrida, on the Yugoslav border.

In the north, the Italians were said to be retreating through the snow-covered mountains toward Elbasan, about 20 miles southeast of Tirana, Albanian capital.

Greeks 30 Miles From Tirana

Belgrade, Dec. 2 (U.P.).—Greek forces in a lightning 18-mile advance beyond the captured Italian base of Pogradetz today swept to within about 30 miles of the Albanian capital of Tirana, according to the Greek radio.

The Italians were reported in harried flight north of Pogradetz in the direction of Elbasan and Tirana.

(The Greek radio, heard in Sofia, said Greek artillery north of Pogradetz had cut the main highway to Elbasan and Tirana along the Shkumbi River, only route of retreat for the Italian forces driven from Elbasan.)

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

A PUSH, A PUSH, A PUSH—The Greek line at the start of the sixth week of the Greek-Italian War was described as "swinging like a barn door," toward the Adriatic, with the hinge at the hard-fought-for Argirocastro. Greeks reported Italians retreating near Lake Ochrida (1) toward Elbasan. Italians claimed they had beaten back a fierce attack on the right side of the line but the Greeks claimed new successes in the vicinity of Premet (2). The British Royal Air Force said it had bombed Italian objectives in the Tepeleni area (3) of the English-speaking world.

3. To create an overwhelming American air force, capable of securing world peace.

4. To educate the younger generation in a spirit of heroism and of sacrifice.

"America can be the decisive help for the victory of Western civilization in Europe if it speeds up its delivery of planes to Britain," Count Coudenhove-Kalergi said. "For Britain will have won the war the day she controls the sky over Europe. Her great advantage over Germany is that she can theoretically smash all the airplane factories of Europe—while Germany cannot destroy these factories in America.

"The date of Britain's final conquest of the air over Europe and of the end of the war depends on the speed of American production and delivery. This date is decisive for the future of civilization, because a long war increases the danger of bolshevism in Europe.

"By speeding its production and delivery, Amreica can, without entering the war, save Europe from Spitzbergen to the Dardenelles for Western civilization."

Discusses Union

Discussing the second point in his program, Count Coudenhove-Kalergi said his proposed union of Western civilization had become a necessity in view of the different attempts to overthrow it.

"This union," he continued, "ought to follow natural lines by uniting the nations west of the Atlantic into a strong Pan American Union, and east of the Atlantic into a strong Pan European Union.

"If Britain wins the war and leads the Pan-European Union as the United States leads Pan-America, both coasts of the Atlantic will be closely linked by a union of the English-speaking world, joining Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to this Atlantic Union.

"One day this organization could take still tighter forms, till the whole world of Western Civilization would form a single federation, capable of facing any aggression even by the combined forces of Bolshevism and Asia.

"This union of Western civilization would unite half the world and a third of its population. It could become the strongest of all groups on the planet."

Concerning his third point—creation of a gigantic American air force—Count Coudenhove-Kalergi said he saw in it the only way to establish lasting peace at the end of the present war.

"The United States," he said, "has a unique opportunity of constructing such an air force, while the European factories are being smashed by the war and neither Russia nor Japan can seriously compete in quality or in quantity with the American production.

"Nobody can prevent America from building up such an overwhelming air power because the oceans will still protect for some years American air factories against air raids. It depends on America alone to take the same lead in airplane construction as it has taken in automobile construction.

"A ten-year plan, aiming at an air fleet strong enough to control the skies of the Atlantic and the Pacific would make it hopeless for any other power to compete with this production. They would probably give up the hopeless race right from the start. America would soon achieve the same superiority in the skies as Britain had in the nineteenth century on the oceans. Britain's command of the seas brought peace to the oceans and contributed very largely to the economic and cultural development of the world in the last century. It put an end to piracy that had infested the seas for a long period.

Visions New Era

"A Pax Americana, based on the rule of the sky, could perhaps assure two centuries of world peace, with unimaginable prosperity, inaugurating a new era of human history."

Urging that the younger generation be educated in a spirit of heroism and sacrifice, Count Coudenhove-Kalergi said that the young people would have to be liberated from the pacifistic slogans of the League of Nations, of collective security, and non-aggression pacts.

"The young generation must see how these hollow phrases led Europe to the precipice of this war," he said. "It must realize that the world is deaf to the weak—that power is a good thing when used for good aims."

"The angel of peace ought not to be represented with a branch of olives in his hand, but with a fiery sword, like the Archangel Michael, who fought the devil and restored the peace of Heaven."

Dies Tells of Plane Plant Sabotage

that a "clique of German Nazies" was employed in strategic positions in the plant where the plane crashed.

The address was plainly a reply to high Administration critics of the Dies Committee, which is seeking an appropriation of $1,000,000 to continue its work after the present January 3 expiration date.

President Roosevelt has been represented as making inquiries as to whether a bloc of House members could be organized to oppose the appropriation. Only last week the President, in inviting Dies to a White House conference on the committee's work, cautioned the Texan against "premature disclosure of facts or of suppositions," and against encroaching on functions of the executive departments.

Accomplishments Recounted

Recounting what he said were accomplishments of the committee thus far, Dies said that as a result of its investigations "Fritz Kuhn is in prison and the German-American Bund has been thoroughly discredited;" "we broke up the People's Front" and "killed" the American League for Peace and Democracy "by exposure," and "today the Workers Alliance is without influence anywhere and completely discredited."

He said the committee brought death of the Federal Theater Project and "exposed out of existence" the Silver Shirts of William Dudley Pelley. He added that the country did not know that Earl Browder had traveled on a false passport, for which he was convicted, until the committee "obtained the damaging admission from his own lips.

Dies said the "exposure" of Nicholas Dozenberg, former Communist leader, later convicted and sentenced, was "not premature, it was long overdue."

He added that committee action regarding the League for Peace and Democracy also "was not premature."

Denied Attack on FBI

The committee was credited with revelation that Communist election petitions "were tainted with fraud, perjury and misrepresentation," on the basis of which he said "more than 100 indictments and from 50 to 60 convictions" have been obtained.

He denied that he had attacked the Federal Bureau of Investigation, but had often praised its work, but he declared that even if it had "16,000 instead of 1,600 agents it could not adequately deal with the Fifth Column through sole reliance on counter-espionage."

"The lesson of Europe," he said, "is that we must destroy the legal apparatus of the Fifth Column, and not simply wait to prosecute the enemies of our country after they have become lawbreakers."

"This committee is feared and despised by the agents and friends of totalitarianism more than any other Government agency," he said

"It is perhaps too much to ask that some of our more influential opponents come out in the open and boldly announce their opposition so that we may join issues with them in honest combat. Things are seldom done that way by the professional politicians in Washington. We must, therefore, be prepared for the more subtle and deceptive type of opposition—the kind which pretends to find some good in the work of the committee, but sees no further necessity for it—the pious expressions of fear that the investigation may impede justice or injure innocent members of subversive organizations—in short, lip service from those who were the avowed enemies of the committee yesterday and are its secret enemies today."

Dies' statement on the alleged plane sabotage said:

"An extraneous piece of metal was placed in the machine in such a position that it would jam the controls during flight.

"Later, a metal bar was spliced in the controls themselves, which, if it had not been discovered, would have almost certainly resulted in the destruction of the plane when it was taken up.

"Still later, it was found that bolts had been removed from the plane's brakes.

"A fourth act of sabotage consisted of tampering with the gas gauges in such a way that tanks would appear to have ample fuel even though nearly empty.

"Finally, other bolts necessary to the stopping of the plane when it reached the ground after flight were found to have been removed."

Dies said he related this incident to show "that we dare not tolerate the presence of totalitarian sympathizers in our defense industries and that they should be removed before they become "overt saboteurs."

Swiss Seek To Study Greek Defense Plan

Ask to Send Army Mission to Observe Mountain War Tactics

By C. L. Sulzberger

Copyright by New York Times

Athens, Greece, Dec. 2.—The Swiss government has requested permission to send a military mission to Greece to study the Greek's technique in mountain warfare, it was learned today.

In many ways Switzerland's problems of resisting invasion could be considered parallel to those of Greece.

Greece's primary defensive tactic has been to allow enemy penetration alonge principal valleys, while retaining the field artillery positions on the heights behind these advances. When the time comes to make a solid stand, the attacking forces are already outflanked by the hidden forces on the peaks and are either cut off entirely or forced to retire because of the lack of lateral communications.

The Greek method of attack is almost the exact reverse of this procedure. The mountain guns and .75's are moved across rough country to the heights first, protected by covering forces, and then shell the enemy below in the valleys until infantry and cavalry are in a position to effect a pincer maneuver in the rear and push along the valleys in a direct frontal attack.

Greeks Control All Highways

The outstanding superiority of the Greeks in mountain fighting enables them to advance along the crests, even against heavily defended positions, before the valley units are able to make disastrous dents in the lines below.

The Greek counter attack has now achieved control of all the key highway entrances to this country, not only directly from Albania but also those crossing Yugoslavia and leading through the Yugoslav (Bitolj) Monastir Gap.

By conquering the strip between Koritza and Pogradetz, Greece has blocked off the highways closest to Monastir (Bitolj) and any Italian invasion through this natural pass to northern Greece and Salonika would have to proceed along the three roads into Yugoslavia north of Lake Ochrida, none of which is suitable for such a process—unless Italy should first regain its lost territory.

Not only has Greece reinforced her offensive position by attaining domination of the entrance to the main highways to Elbasan, Tirana and Durazzo, as well as those to Argirocastro and Valona, while cutting off the easternmost lateral communication links of Albania, but the horseshoe network of roads connecting northwestern and central Greece is now defended by additional strong positions.

Leads from Larissa to Athens

One starts from Larissa, where it connects with Salonika and Athens, and leads through Kalambaka and Metsova across the Pindus range to Janina. Another runs south from Janina to Arta and Agrinion to the ports of the Gulf of Patras and Corinth, across the mountains near Delphi.

Then from Janina to the Ionian Sea and the Straits of Corfu there is a road leading to Igoumenitza, which is the best harbor of Epirus and which the Italians have been trying to destroy. This, along with the passes of the rivers Acheron and Cocytus—connected by the ancients as the prototypes of the rivers of Hell—is the only link to the sea. Thus Epirus offers little opportunity for developing an operation into a general invasion, as the Italians discovered. The district is practically a topographic trap.

Iron Guard Chief Disbands Police, Bans Green Shirts

Copyright by New York Times

Bucharest (Tuesday), Dec. 3.—Rumanian Legionary Iron Guard police were suddenly ordered disbanded early today in an official decree issued by Vice Premier Horia Sima, commander of the Iron Guard.

The order forbids legionnaires to wear the green shirts save on official occasions and with special permission.

The official decree also provides for revision of Iron Guard membership affecting all members enrolled during the past three months.

The decree carried a fourth and subsidiary enforcement clause amplifying the first three orders dissolving the legionary police, restricting the green shirt attire and revising the legion membership.

The official communique reporting the decree was issued early today after a meeting of the cabinet's council late last night.

War Department Lets $5,132,425 Contract

The War Department announced yesterday that it had awarded a $5,132,425 contract for the construction of a replacement center at Fort Eustis, Va.

The contract went to John P. Pettyjohn & Co., Lynchburg; Dewey G. Weddle & Co., Norfolk, and Hofheimer Construction Co., Norfolk.

A contract was awarded to Watson Automotive Equipment Co., Washington, D. C., semitrailers, $957,440.

cheered loudly when the King's automobile passed.

Iron Guard Split

To this frontier watching post came reports that the Iron Guard—whose bloody revenge upon the old-school politicians of the deposed King Carl's regime had precipitated the country's current crisis—was itself now split into three factions.

One faction was understood to be supporting Horia Sima, who has called for discipline. Another was said to be following Ion Codreanu, father of the slain founder of the Guard for whose death in Carol's regime so much avenging bloodletting already has occurred.

The third faction, and vastly the largest, was reported simply out of control, looting and paying off personal scores under the present protection of the Green Shirt.

The Rumanian army iself was picured as indecisive.

Underworld Joins Up

The green-shirted guardists, meanwhile, aggregated more than 200,000, where two months ago they were 6,000, and this increase was attributed in part at least to indiscriminate recruiting and self-appointment of members—including most of the underworld of Bucharest and other large cities.

One of the demands now being pressed by the Iron Guard is the return of northern Transylvania, which only last August 30 was given to Hungary under an Axis-dictated settlement.

In a speech last night Premier Antonescu told 100,000 guardists that Germany and Italy had shown "understanding" of this Rumanian desire.

(In Berlin today, however, authorized persons said Germany would adhere to the August settlement, adding, ". . . contrary opinions will go unheeded so far as we are concerned.") numerous.

Just before dawn a second ship, the new 5,497-ton British freighter, Lady Clanely, wirelessed she had been torpedoed at latitude 55 north, longitude 20 west, about 30 miles northeast of the first call.

The powerful Valencia, Ireland, radio station relayed the next word of the attack, almost two hours later, that the British ship, "call letters GKIF," was "being attacked by submarine" at 55.03 north, 18.40 west. Mackay Radio could not identify the ship, but said she probably was one newly constructed or recently taken over by the British.

An hour later, from almost the same position on the edge of the declared German blockade around the British Isles, the Goodleigh, sister ship of the Lady Glanely, radioed she had been torpedoed.

A second submarine then evidently joined the attack 70 miles to the north as the convoy scattered to avoid destruction.

Probably Same Ship

Mackay heard an indistinct call from a torpedoed ship first believed to be the S. S. Victoria. A later message from the Valencia Station, which Mackay said could hear the call more distinctly and obtain the correct name and position, said that the Victor Ross had been torpedoed.

Mackay operators said this was probably the same ship. The Victor Ross, 12,247-ton British molasses tanker, trades between England and the Caribbean and Port Everglades, Fla.

Within 25 minutes, another unidentified ship said she had been torpedoed and required "immediate assistance." Her position at 54.36 North, 19.25 West, indicated the submarine which struck the first blow was still attacking.

The final call, at 8 a. m. (E.S.T.), came from the Loch Ranza, 4,958-ton British freighter, torpedoed and "sinking in 54.37 North, 18.54 West, and has shipwrecked crew of another vessel aboard."

Later Distress Call

Then at 3:37 p. m. (E. S. T.) a distress signal from another vessel, the tenth of the day, was heard by Mackay. The 4,360-ton British freighter W. Hendrik said she had been "torpedoed at latitude 55 north, longitude 15.40 west."

This would place her 200 miles east of the earlier attack on the convoy. Whether the W. Hendrik was a ship caught fleeing the danger area could not be ascertained in foreign exchange. The collapse of France, which was a party to a tripartite currency agreement, including also Great Britain and the United States, made the fund inoperative.

It had been used in peace days to support the currencies of France and Great Britain and also of smaller nations that adhered to the agreement, notably Belgium, Holland and Switzerland.

Yesterday's disclosure means that a new, momentous use has been found for the fund. Officials said the money might well be used to support the currencies of Latin American nations that find themselves in financial straits.

Thus the fund would become a war chest in the economic battle this country is wagaing against totalitarianism.

By bolstering currencies of sister American nations, officials hope to make it more difficult for dictator nations to penetrate them econnomically.

Further, the $2,000,000,000 fund is expected to become a powerful ally to the good neighbor policy. If its next achievement is to win the friendship of Argentina by supporting the Argentine economy, the State Department will have reason to be thankful, it was said. Argentina has been the most elusive and most important diplomatic prize in this hemisphere.

Secretary Morgenthau explained the new use of the fund to Congress in order to keep a promise made March 2, 1939, when the Senate Banking Committee was considering the renewal of the Treasury's vast money powers.

At that time the Treasury Secretary said:

"Senators, if there is a war in any foreign country, before we would use the stablization fund or any money in the Treasury to assist any country in prosecuting the war, I would come up before the proper committee and ask for guidance."

Morgenthau said yesterday that he had wanted to explain the Chinese loan to Congress, although there is some doubt whether China is technically at war with Japan, since the war has never been formally declared.

After the hearing, which was closed, Morgenthau said that "I got what I came after—a vote of confidence—" and said he would proceed immediately to close the deal with China.

Secretary Hull said he considered the Chinese agreement a "vital matter," adding:

"Under the circumstances it is the least we can do for the job that China is doing."

Under the agreement with China the Chungking government proposes to pay off its $50,000,000 export credit by sending the United States tin, tungsten and wolframite.

Secretary Morgenthau was asked whether this meant that the United States will have a vital stake in keeping open the Burma Road, one of China's last remaining supply routes to the outside world.

He declined to comment. Secretary of Commerce Jones "I would not know" when asked about this phase.

Prior to the newest China loan, there were three other commitments for export credits that totalled $70,000,000. In addition, in 1938, the United States supported China's currency to the extent of $50,000,000.

At the press conference Secretary Morgenthau took under advisement a suggestion that Greece be given a moratorium on its December 15 war debt payment to the United States. Finland took advantage of this concession last week.

Before the Congressional committee meeting, Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, expressed opposition to the $50,000,000 stabilization fund credit for China, saying he would oppose it on the ground that the stabilization fund was not the proper source to supply the money.

Children's Hospital Now 'Out of the Red'

President of Board Lauds Miss Gibson In Annual Report

For the first six-month period since 1934, Children's Hospital operated "in the black" during the first half of this year, corporate members of the institution heard yesterday at their annual meeting.

This news, embodied in a report of Board President Charles D. Drayton, provided an auspicious setting for the seventieth anniversary of the hospital and the twentieth anniversary of Miss Mattie M. Gibson as its superintendent.

"Time is not always a criterion of worth," said Drayton, "but we feel that in the case of the hospital and Miss Gibson, time has tested both and they have worthily earned the highest praise."

He said the anniversary found the institution "in a better situation physically and financially than in many years" after "we had wept over deficits of $25,000 to $30,000 a year for the past five years."

Thanks Public Sympathy

Thus, he said, the Nation's second oldest children's hospital, supported by voluntary contributions, bequests and endowments, is "coming into the black and going out of the red," thanks to the public's sympathy for a "grand cause for little children."

Thomas Bell Sweeney, first vice president of the board, declared: "No individual in the long history of the Children's Hospital has exercised a more potent influence than Miss Gibson on its growth in beneficence, on its physical expansion, on its ability to survive financially, on the spirit of loyal service on the part of its board of directors, its medical staff, its members, the ladies who comprise its various auxiliaries and the nurses and employes who have come and gone and are still here."

Miss Gibson, a native of Iowa, came to the hospital not long after returning to this country from France, where she served as an enlisted nurse at the front for one and a half years and won the Croix de Guerre for bravery.

She Rejuvenated Hospital

"Almost immediately," Sweeney said, "the hospital took a new lease on life. From what has been described as a more or less nondescript home for indigent children, it qualified in one year as a 'Grade A hospital,' due entirely to the house cleaning and the rejuvenation given it by the new superintendent.

"Then began its remarkable growth, which has continued uninterruptedly for 20 years. It became in time a great honor for a doctor to be on its medical staff or a citizen of Washington to be on its board of directors or a member of one of its auxiliaries.

"Mere figures mean little in considering the work of the hospital as compared with its increased efficiency and the new spirit of enthusiasm and devotion which now characterizes this institution. However, it is interesting to note that in 1919—the year before Miss Gibson took charge—there were less than 1,500 patients treated in the house and less than 5,000 children brought into the dispensary.

"This year there were over 7,500 bed patients and more than 64,000 treated in the dispensary."

Obtained New Buildings

He said, "Miss Gibson's enthusiasm and energy and foresightedness" were responsible for obtaining new buildings made necessary by the increased number of patients. She also showed "amazing ability" to raise money for the hospital, he said.

Tribute to "the inspiration that our superintendent, Miss Gibson, has brought to the board" was paid by the board of lady visitors in a report by its president, Mrs. William J. Flather.

Miss Gibson herself reviewed activities of the hospital since she became superintendent and reported specifically on affairs of the last year.

As one item, she reported that the hospital's blood and serum bank had received contributions of $7,805.21 since the last annual meeting.

Organizations Thanked

"The hospital," she said, "is unceasingly grateful to The Washington Post, Station WJSV, the American Contract Bridge League, the Variety Club, the Connecticut Avenue Association, the L'Arcenciel Club and other interested groups and organizations for the continued support that makes the operation of our blood and serum bank possible."

At the meeting Miss Gibson received an electric clock from the hospital's resident staff of physicians, a fountain pen from the other hospital personnel, a bouquet of 20 American Beauty roses—one for each year of her service—from the Children's Hospital Nurses Alumnae Association, corsages from the Junior League and the Board of Lady Visitors, and more flowers from other friends.

The meeting elected Albert Howard to the board of directors to fill the unexpired term of George W. Brown, and reelected Directors Bruce Baird, William F. Ham, Albert Howard, Dr. Loren B. T. Johnson, Thomas B. Sweeney, Dr. Joseph S. Wall and Frederick William Wile.

Members Elected

New corporate members of the hospital elected yesterday were Alfred G. Neal, Franklin L. Fisher, James H. Lemon, William E. Pearson, Bynum E. Hinton, Clark G. Diamond, Ernest H. Daniel, William W. Mackall, Carter T. Barron, Miss Grace Thompson, R. Ross Perry and Alexander F. Jones.

Annual reports submitted included those of Dr. Joseph S. Wall, chairman of the medical staff; Mrs. Frederick R. Solger, president of the Child Welfare Society Board; Miss Mary L. Poole, director of the Junior League's social service department; Miss Edith Torkington, for Mrs. Joseph E. Himes, president of the Children's Country Home, and Miss Anna J. Keady, of the Christ Child Society.

The meeting was followed by tea, served by the board of lady visitors.

Ramspeck Law Compliance Gets Under Way

By Edward Ryan

Establishment of uniform appeals boards to review Government employe efficiency ratings is expected to come among the first official moves under the Ramspeck civil service law, officials indicated yesterday.

The Council of Personnel Administration, key agency for linking together the personnel work of the Government's bureaus with the Civil Service Commission, has started a survey of the departments to find how they are now handling their efficiency rating problems, it was learned.

Results of the survey will be turned over to the Civil Service Commission, to be used in working out their plan for applying the review board provisions of the Ramspeck law.

Long a Source of Complaints

The bill, approved last week by the President, calls for setting up one or more three-member boards in each of the Federal departments.

The employe efficiency ratings, handed out once a year, have been a perennial source of complaints, both from the people who have to make the ratings and from those who receive them. To the individual employe, his efficiency rating is the first test of whether he will be in line for pay increases promotions during the following year.

Although the efficiency review section of the Ramspeck bill is in effect now, it is unlikely to be used, officials said, to straighten out any complaints about this year's ratings. The review machinery, however, is expected to be ready for the next crop of ratings, to be given out April 15.

Under the Ramspeck bill, the three-member boards will have final authority to adjust individual efficiency ratings any way they "may find to be proper."

While original efficiency ratings will continue to be assigned to employes by their immediate supervisors—the system now in use—any employe will be entitled to a hearing and review of his rating, upon a written request to the chairman of the review board.

Both the employe and the representatives of the agency head will be given full opportunity to give their own testimony.

The bill says that the chairman of each board is to be appointed by the Civil Service Commission, one member designated by the department head, and the third member chosen by the department employes "in such manner as may be determined by the Civil Service Commission."

Biggest single change expected under the new system is that the review boards will have the last word. In several of the Government agencies separate boards have been set up to review efficiency ratings, in others the efficiency rating problems have been handled along with other grievances by general appeals boards, but all of their findings have been advisory, with the final decision up to the personnel directors of the agency head.

Aids Capitol Hill Employes

Meanwhile, the Civil Service Commission, it was learned, has ruled that under the Ramspeck bill clerical employes on Capitol Hill will have the same status when they seek jobs in the executive agencies that former Federal workers have when they apply for reinstatement.

The Ramspeck bill gives legislative clerical workers with four years' experience on the Hill, who lose their jobs there involuntarily, a chance to obtain a classified civil status by noncompetitive examination and transfer to a regular civil service job. The transfer has to be made within a year after loss of the legislative job.

The commission decided that the clerical workers eligible for these transfers would include "any worker employed in a clerical capacity in any branch of the Senate or House," but would not include messengers, laborers, elevator operators, carpenters, or policemen on Capitol Hill.

Procedure to Get a Job

The eligible workers, the commission said, would go about landing a job in the executive service this way: The employe must first locate a suitable vacancy, and the appointing officer desiring his services must make a formal request to the commission for authority to hire the applicant.

If the commission decides the employe is eligible for the job, it will give him a noncompetitive test. If he fails the first test, he can be given a second immediately, either at his own request or the request of the appointing officer, and a third after six months.

Martin, Flynn Face Campaign Cost Quiz

Other Party Leaders Also Called Before Grand Jury Here

The stage was set yesterday for the Justice Department's investigation of Presidential campaign expenditures as nearly a score of leaders from both major political parties, including Republican National Committee Chairman Joseph W. Martin, jr., and Democratic National Committee Chairman Edward J. Flynn were subpenaed to appear before a special District grand jury.

Investigation of the parties' records of contributions and disbursements, as well as questioning of party officials, will be undertaken at the inquiry to be conducted by Maurice M. Milligan, special assistant to the Attorney General.

Subpenaed to appear Thursday before the grand jury, in addition to Martin and Flynn, were Oliver A. Quayle, jr., treasurer of the Republican National Committee; C. B. Goodspeed, of Chicago, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee; Oren Root, jr., president of the Associated Willkie Clubs of America; William Settle, of Petroleum, Ind., chairman of the National Committee of Agriculture.

Leo Casey, director of publicity for Democrats for Willkie; John W. Hanes, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, official of the National Committee of Democrats for Willkie; Louis W. Douglas, chairman of the National Committee of Democrats for Willkie, and Robert G. Allen, chairman of the same organization.

Subpenaed to appear Friday were Samuel B. Pettengill, former Congressman, and chairman of the National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government; Louis J. Taber, of Columbus, Ohio, vice president of the organization; Sumner Gerard, treasurer, of New York City, and Henry Chapin, of Philadelphia, treasurer of the Committee for Independent Voters for Roosevelt and Wallace.

Many Complaints Reported

Impanelling of the special grand jury is expected to be completed by tomorrow.

Attorney General Jackson explained his department had received many complaints that the $3,000,000 limit imposed by the Hatch Act on a political party's campaign expenditures was being violated. He said that allegations covering both Hatch and Corrupt Practices Act violations would be investigated.

Individual contributions to political parties, limited to $5,000 under the Hatch Act, also are expected to be examined by the grand jury.

On November 4 the Democratic National Committee reported contributions of $1,917,213 and expenditures of $1,848,727. At the same time the Republican National Committee reported its contributions to be $2,993,991, while its expenditures were put at $2,313,400.

Janesville, Wis., Dec. 2 (AP).—George Blanchard, jr., 27, son of former Wisconsin Representative George W. Blanchard, was found dead of asphyxiation in the garage at his parents' Edgerton home, Coroner E. J. Overton said today.

and if the WPA opportunity comes the wages will hardly be sufficient to provide rent, coal, food and clothing for a family of eight.

With the help of $100, the family could be provided for in the winter months. By that time, it is expected that Mr. S. will be stronger and able to get better paid work in private industry. In the meantime, he and his family have nowhere to look except to The Post's Christmas Fund.

Family certified and help administered by the American Legion welfare department. Amount needed: $100.

Family No. 4

The T family has been heavily burdened with problems of illness and insufficient funds, but with a moderate amount of help now they would have a chance to come out of their difficulties. Without this help—they hardly dare to imagine what will happen.

After Mr. T became ill with arthritis two years ago, he can work only irregularly at door-to-door sellnig, although he formerly had a good job in industry and had an excellent work history. Mrs. T, who had been working on WPA, became ill and is now in a hospital with an infection in her leg. It will be several weeks before she can return to her WPA job.

In the meantime, the T family, which includes a boy and girl in their teens, is living in unhealthful overcrowded quarters. The T's are worried because they are so handicapped in providing for the children—and they are such promising children, too. The girl is doing well in high school, and the boy who is in vocational school is so talented in art that his teacher is already forecasting a commercial art career for him after two more years of training.

Mr. T has no teeth, and feels that his health would be better if he had plates with which to chew solid food.

In addition to that need, $100 is required to move the family into better living quarters and to help them with other urgent living expenses.

It would carry them over these next few difficult months.

Family certified and help administered by Salvation Army. Amount needed: $100.

Prompt contributions from Post readers will assure that these families will have something to celebrate this Christmas. This would be the prospect of a better future. The contributions would be a long-time investment in human happiness.

Readers who may wish to study several of the cases, before choosing the one to designate for help, are urged to clip the daily stories in The Post for that purpose. It is not necessary to designate a family however. All contributions will go into the making of new hope and a new chance for the 50 neediest families.

Five agencies selected these families as being the neediest in Washington. They are: Family Service Association, Catholic Charities, Salvation Army, American Legion Welfare Department, Bureau of Rehabilitation.

ties on American docks. He warned against individual citizens attempting to conduct their own investigations of such cases and against hysteria which could bring unjust accusations against innocent persons.

The association was told that many industrial plants producing defense products have been lax in safeguarding their premises and secrets. Government agents, the inspector said, have, without making known their identity, walked through some of the most vital interiors of these plants, talked freely with workmen and, without being challenged, carefully scrutinized vital pieces of machinery.

The stevedores are contractors who employ longshoremen — the men who load ships and work at the docks. The association has distributed a questionnaire among stevedores industry to obtain information that might be useful to the Maritime Commission in the national defense program.

Lord Marley, former undersecretary of state for war and a leader of the Labor Party, urged American loans, the sale of new warships instead of "obsolete" ones to Britain, and the use of American warships to convoy British goods halfway across the Atlantic in American bottoms.

In what was probably the frankest public exposition of the British viewpoint made by an Englishman in this country, Lord Marley said that the Presidential election was a battle "to see who could promise more aid to Britain—Roosevelt or Willkie." All England had to do, he stated, was to "sit back and wait for additional assistance."

"We're still waiting," he added, dryly.

works estimates to the bone and commented: "We intend to see if he means it. If he really intends to save on nonmilitary spending, we will go along with him to the extent that he does."

He said farm appropriations should come in for some paring along with public works and relief.

Coupled with the economy program, Taber said, "we should build up our tax schedules to the point where we can take care of more than just the normal budget. We must pay part of the military costs as we go."

Meanwhile, Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the House Ways and Means Committee, declared no specific 1941 tax proposals have yet crystallized and "we won't know exactly what will be done about taxes until we have seen the March 15 tax returns."

Doughton said it is futile to speculate on the form increased taxes next year might take until Congress knows how much money needs to be raised.

"There probably will be a new bill next year, but we don't know beyond question that there will be," said Doughton. "We are going to raise a lot more money on our present tax structure as business picks up. If we need to raise more it won't be a vast amount, and there have been no decisions on how we will raise it."

The Ways and Means chairman, who will launch tax studies cooperatively with the Senate Finance Committee next January, said he thought Congress would be able to balance the normal budget next session and pay a little as well on emergency defense costs.

Non-defense estimates will be segregated from strictly military spending in preparation of the next budget message.

Taber attacked the so-called "double budget" arrangement yesterday as a "smoke screen" and "unnecessary."

Roosevelt Confers 2 Hours With Leahy

President Gives New Envoy to Vichy Views On World Relations

President Roosevelt yesterday spelnt two hours giving his views on foreign relations to the new Ambassador to France, Admiral William D. Leahy, before the President left on an inspection cruise of American defenses in the Caribbean.

The admiral said he had been given an account of the "general world situation in its application to France."

Asked for comment on reports that he might be shifted from the Vichy post to London, succeeding Joseph P. Kennedy, Leahy replied: "The President didn't say anything about it."

Expects to Leave Soon

Leahy said that after conferences with Secretary Hull and other State Department officials and the winding up of Puerto Rican business he expected to depart in "the near future" for Vichy.

Leahy asserted that in connection with concluding his administration as governor that he wanted to "get some more money for Puerto Rico."

He said that he would appear before the Budget Director for that purpose but declined to state an amount.

He added that he also would talk over with the WPA the funds to be granted by that agency to the island administration.

Kennedy "Off Pay Roll"

Meanwhile, Ambassador Kennedy paid farewell calls at the State Department and said "I'm out of a job now and off the pay roll here."

Kennedy, who announced his resignation Sunday night, said he had wound up his business at the State Department and was leaving at once by air for Palm Beach, Fla., for a vacation.

Although he said the President asked him to retain the title of Ambassador until a successor was appointed, Kennedy explained that he was "off the pay roll" and would no longer function unless the State Department needed his services in connection with British relations.

Stephen Early, Presidential press secretary, was asked yesterday whether another Government job was in prospect for Kennedy.

"I don't see anything like that in the picture right now," Early replied.

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Dec. 2.—Rear Admiral William D. Leahy, retired, recently selected as United States Ambassador to France, declared here today that the French island possession of Martinique "would make a perfectly splendid base—if we had it." He did not comment when asked if he thought this country should attempt to acquire it.

ONLY HIS UNCLE SAM COUNTS, NOW—Elbert Hull, cousin of the Secretary of State, escapes no Army duty because he has a famous relative. Since he volunteered for three years of Army duty, there have been good-natured shouts of "Cuz," and "Little Cordell," but Ralph A. Bean, jr. (right), also of Knoxville, Tenn., says "I've seen what he's had to take and few could have done it better." They're shown at Savannah Air Base on "kitchen police" duty

'Cuz' Hull Gets Works Plus As He Learns How to Solider

Secretary of State's Cousin Takes Lots of Kidding at Savannah Air Base As He Peels Potatoes and Scrubs Pots

By the Associated Press

Savannah Air Base, Ga., Dec. 2.—Cordell Hull's cousin Elbert is in the Army now, his six weeks of recruit training finished, but there's no end in sight for the jokes cracked at his expense.

"Hey, Cuz," yelled a sergeant thrusting aside a tent flap, "come out with your best smile on, there's a guy here wants to take your picture."

Private Hull, who's learned to answer promptly and smartly to voices of authority, stepped out into the company street, without the smile. Ever since he enlisted for three years at Knoxville, Tenn., and reporters learned he was a cousin of the Secretary of State, he's been hearing the shout of "Cuz" and "Little Cordell."

He was doing kitchen police this week—not just for the benefit of photographers, either, he pointed out. When the first flare of publicity over his enlistment subsided, young Hull disappeared into the recruit training machine of the Army.

He got the works—and a little more.

Emerging from the recruit center as a private, he looked hopefully skyward at the big bombers overhead and peeled more potatoes. The Army didn't send along that famous machine peeler used at the bigger posts.

But he got his revenge this week. Fifty hungry men were waiting around for chow when the photographer showed up to make "Cuz" again, and Hull patiently posed. It interrupted work at the mess tent for half an hour or more.

"Local boy makes good," shouted a chorus of hungry soldiers as young Hull scrubbed dutifully at a fire-blacked pot.

"I hope," said Hull, "that my people back home won't get the idea that all I'm going to do for the next three years is peel potatoes and wash pots.

In spite of his famous relative, Hull is popular with the soldiers in his squadron. "He's a regular fellow," said Ralph A. Bean, jr., of Knoxville, Tenn., who enlisted a couple of days before Hull. "I've seen what he's had to take, and there's few could have done it better."

Hull plans to specialize in radio through the Air Corps technical school.

Cramer Quits Post On Virgin Islands

St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Dec. 2 (AP).—Lawrence W. Cramer, of New York, Governor of the Virgin Islands since August 31, 1935, announced late today that he had resigned, effective at the pleasure of President Roosevelt. The resignation was not unexpected.

Rear Admiral Hayne Ellis, now in these waters aboard the battleship Texas, is reported as a possible successor to coordinate defense and civil activities.

2 British Cities Bear Brunt of Nazi Raids

Attack in Southwest, West; Comparative Quiet Elsewhere

By the Associated Press

London (Tuesday), Dec. 3.—German bombers concentrated overnight on two towns, one in the west and one in the southwest, both of which have been repeatedly raided in recent nights, but the rest of Britain enjoyed comparative quiet.

For the second time in a week, London had no premidnight alarm.

In addition, the raiders also were over Liverpool, East Anglia, Wales and the south coast area.

Bombs hurled by a single plane on an east Anglian town caused a number of casualties and entombments in a workers' district.

The southwest town, undergoing its seventh successive attack, reported that strong antiaircraft fire drove the raiders back out to sea before they reached the town.

Damage Reported

But in the western city apparently chosen for the night's assault, the Germans followed their usual procedure of hurling flares, then fire bombs, and then high explosives. Damage was reported from several districts.

[Berlin dispatches said strong formations of German bombers were carrying out a sustained attack on Bristol, southwestern British port subjected once before to a concentrated assault. They said nothing of other towns under attack.]

Just before this new assault got under way the air and home security ministries issued the first official estimate of the human loss in the heavy Nazi raids on Southampton Saturday and Sunday nights, saying:

". . . Casualties were not large taking into account the scale of operations. For the two raids. There are known to be about 370, which includes both killed and seriously wounded."

"Mission of Frightfulness"

That port city of 175,000 population was struck Sunday night by some 200 planes in what the British Press Association called a "Mission of Frightfulness." Thousands were left without homes; whole areas were left in ruins. Feeding and redistributing the homeless victims was declared a major problem.

From a community underground shelter hit squarely by a heavy bomb bodies still were being brought forth late in the day.

Yesterday was relatively peaceful. Along an old, accustomed aerial battlefront over the coast of Kent British pilots fought off German squadrons in a defense officially declared so successful that from dawn to dusk not a single heavy raid was reported in all of Britain.

So far as was known, said the air ministry, not a bomb fell upon the islands during that daylight period, and two German raiders were reported sent to destruction in fights over the Channel without loss to the British.

Marines' Parade Honors Parquette, Retiring Sergeant

More than 150 Marines paraded for half an hour yesterday near the Navy Yard in honor of Fred Parquette, paymaster sergeant, U. S. M. C., who has retired after 30 years of Army and Marine Corps service.

Commanded by Maj. Harry Leland, the Marines drilled to music provided by the drum and bugle corps of the barracks, at Eighth and D Streets Southeast. Lieut. Clyde Brandon, adjutant for the Marine units here, read the orders placing the 52-year-old veteran on the retired list.

Parquette, a native of Saginaw, Mich., served six enlistments with the Marines and two with the Army. About eight of his 30 years in the armed forces were spent in Washington. He makes his home at 1614 North Buchanan Street, Arlington, Va.

Another German Ship Ready To Clear Tampico

Tampico, Mexico, Dec. 2 (AP).—The 9,660-ton German passenger-cargo ship Orinoco, which developed engine trouble last month when she and three other Nazi vessels attempted to leave this harbor, had full steam up and appeared ready tonight to sail but lacked papers clearance.

The Orinoco, Rhein, Idarwald and Phrygia made an unsuccessful dash for the sea November 15. The Phrygia was scuttled.

The Rhein and Idarwald again left port in a second sally last week. Whether they successfully reached the ocean or another port has not been reported.

Gets Sailing Papers

Callao, Peru, Dec. 2 (AP).—The 4,844-ton German steamer Hermonthis, in refuge in this port since August 30, 1939, has been granted permission to leave for Hamburg, but still had not departed tonight.

Southampton Now Is a Ruins H. G. Wells Might Imagine

Scarcely a Thing Worth Saving Is Left On Main Street of English Seaport; Refugees Streaming Out, No Signs of Panic

By Edward W. Beattie, Jr.
United Press Staff Writer

Southampton, England, Dec. 2.—Southampton was a town of spectacular devastation tonight after two nights of German air bombardment.

The air and home security ministries in London announced that casualties were about 370, "not large, taking into account the scale of operations."

The Nazi onslaughts turned the seaport into one of the most impressive scenes of ruin throughout England during the nearly three months that the United Kingdom has been under air siege.

Three days ago when I last was here this port had been attacked seriously only once, and damage was superficial.

Tonight, after one eight-hour and one seven-hour pelting with thousands of high explosive and incendiary bombs, it is a city that H. G. Wells might have imagined.

Perhaps its wounds will turn to scars in a few days. Tonight it is licking the wounds and trying to find some means of fighting back toward normalcy.

For half a mile along High Street there is nothing left but blank walls, fire-gutted interiors and a tremendous tumble of debris.

In another section closer to the water, a similar vista was left by the departing bombers. In dozens of sections houses were smashed into the ground, trees uprooted and wires torn down.

Refugees Leave City

Tonight homeless refugees were leaving the city. Some pushed bedding and their salvaged belongings in little hand carts or baby carriages.

They were taking what they could. The possessions of one woman included two love birds in a big cage. A dead pigeon, apparently killed by a blast, lay on the steps of the World War memorial.

The rest of the town was going about its business as best it could. But thousands must be without jobs because their places of employment were ruined.

Since I arrived two air warnings have sounded. The people went calmly to shelters, and when the all-clear sounded returned to whatever they were doing. There was no sign of panic.

Others waited at the edge of town, trying to get rides with passing motorists. Bakers' trucks and other commercial vehicles were loaded to the limit with persons going somewhere else for the night.

Loud speakers mounted on trucks informed the people what to do in the interest of safety. Troops had moved in to help police and fire departments and other emergency services keep order and smother the last wisp of smoke from the fires set Sunday night.

All fires long since were under control.

Main Street Devastated

Along the main street hardly anything worth saving remained. What the explosives missed the fires got.

No ruin could be quite so spectacular as Coventry's cathedral, where the gaunt, scarred spire looked down on a pile of wreckage. But half a dozen or more of the big churches here were gone completely. Usually only the walls were standing.

Glass in the parks was splotched with dirty gray burns where incendiaries spewed out their strength. They must have showered down like rain.

Entire streets were bomb-pocked and impassable. Several churches, a theater, four cinemas, several banks, a hospital and uncounted houses were demolished or damaged badly.

Bodies still were being taken out of public shelters pulverized by the big bombs showered on the town Saturday and Sunday nights. Officials believed many bodies were lost in the craters and mountains of debris and might never be found.

Authorities estimated 200 German bombers carried out the raid ending early today.

R.A.F. Attacks Nazi Targets In 4 Nations

Shipbuilding Yard At Wilhelmshaven Heavily Bombarded

By Stephen Greene
Copyright by New York Tribune Inc.

London, Dec. 2.—After a day of inactivity, Royal Air Force bombers went back to work last night and pounded scattered targets in four nations. All the planes returned to their bases.

The most important attack of the night, according to the air ministry communique, was delivered against the Marinewerft, at Wilhelmshaven, a key naval shipbuilding yard.

The planes arrived over their targets late in the evening and cruised in circles, waiting for an opening in the low-lying clouds to belabor the six submarine drydocks or the shipping in the spacious seaside basin. Five explosions were observed. At one factory building a large fire sprang up in the yards before the planes headed for home shortly before sunup.

Coastal command Blenheims, it was officially reported, launched a dawn raid on the German U-boat basin at Lorient, Brittany, which has lately become a favorite target of R. A. F. offensive craft. For the second time in 24 hours the naval station was straddled with heavy bombs.

A single American-built Lockheed-Hudson aircraft attacked a military camp at Kristiansand, in south Norway, and unloaded a stick of high explosives across the center of a stretch of buildings. More bombs, believed to have done considerable damage, were spaced along a block of storesheds in the town, a few miles distant.

Other objects of British attack during the night and early morning included the power station, jetty and drydocks at Brest, France, and gas works at Esjberg, Denmark, where explosions followed the bombing and flames, the air ministry reported, "covered the whole area."

[Germany issued an official denial that the R. A. F. had successfully bombed Wilhelmshaven Sunday night, the Associated Press said. Not a single British plane appeared over Wilhelshaven, the Germans asserted.]

Capper Hopes Next Congress Gives D. C. Vote

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, long-time champion of District suffrage, yesterday told the Senate that he hoped the next Congress would act promptly on the constitutional amendment resolution to give the National Capital national representation.

He expressed regret that the Sumners resolution was pigeonholed by the House Rules Committee last summer.

"Congress can no longer afford to continue so un-American a condition to exist at the Nation's Capital unless it is willing to confess unbelief in a representative democratic form of government," he said.

Capper read to the Senate the resolution recently adopted by the Society of Natives on District suffrage.

British Port of Southampton Is 'Lost City,' Nazis Declare; Called Target for Luftwaffe's Most Devastating Blow

By Percival Knauth
Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Dec. 2.—The third concentrated attack of German bombers on Southampton last night wreaked further destruction on this British port and is described here as one of the most devastating operations yet carried out by the German air force.

Tonight German bombers are concentrating their attack on Bristol, according to late reports received in Berlin. It is stated here that "stronger forces" were under way since darkness fell to add to the destructive work caused in that city by previous raids last week. No further details of the attack are as yet available.

Southampton is listed by the German press as a "lost city" and reports from the French Channel coast state that a pillar of smoke by day and a pillar of fire by night are clearly visible from Cherbourg and other Channel points.

Report Burning Ruins

German reconnaissance planes flying over southern England and Southampton, during today, report that the city is covered with a thick cloud of yellow smoke, streaked with flames from the burning ruins beneath.

It is inferred here, therefore, that many of the fires still raging in the city are burning oil depots and gasworks.

London also suffered heavy attacks Sunday night, according to German reports. This capital, in which the Germans say an average of five alarms daily has kept the population in the cellar 12 hours of each day, was also raided during daylight. Several new fires are reported here as the result of last night's raids.

Birmingham and Liverpool, both of which have been "coventrized" more than once, were likewise again attacked last night, it is reported here. These raids, however, the Germans say, were only incidental to the great attack launched against Southampton.

Flaming Destruction

German fliers tell of a scene of flaming destruction which unfolded beneath their eyes, as wave after wave of planes flew on to the attack and dropped their incendiary and high-explosive bombs. Parachute flares sailed like brilliant comets across the heavens, these reports state, lighting up the entire area of the city.

The first of the attacking planes, as usual, dropped flares and incendiary bombs, of which thousands upon thousands must have fallen on the town. When they hit they sprinkled the entire city with blue-white dots which quickly changed to yellow-red as the flames caught, German reports state.

These reports speak of docks, oil dumps, gas tanks, warehouses and supply depots of all kinds, as targets. The Vickers aircraft factory, it is stated here, was obliterated in a sea of flame. The bombs used were, reportedly, of all calibers, including the heaviest "aerial torpedoes" whose blasting powers, reportedly, are sufficient to wipe a whole block of houses from the face of the earth.

Tokyo, Dec. 2.—The central administrative control of the Japanese army remains, entirely and somewhat conspicuously, unchanged in the seasonal reshuffle and promotions announced today.

Officers concerned have been closely associated with the army's initiative in the new structure policy that is intended to organize Japan for total warfare, also with the army attitude towards the foreign policy which culminated in the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo pact.

Their retention signifies the army's determination to continue the present national policy.

The factors influencing the army decision to retain the key men in the central control without change, are enumerated by the newspaper Asahi:

The international situation resulting from the conclusion of the tripartite pact; the new phase of strategic operations against Chiang Kai-Shek following the occupation of Indo-China; the Nanking treaty and expectations that the war will be protracted.

To Our Patrons and Friends

When the present home of the Liberty National Bank was built some twenty years ago, the officers and directors had the foresight to provide ample room for normal development and growth.

In recent years, however, this growth, in which you have played an important part, has so far exceeded expectations of the founders as to require enlargement of the building and increase in the bank's facilities.

These improvements have now been completed and we wish to express our sincere thanks to all our patrons and friends for their patience and co-operation during the course of alterations.

In carrying out the improvements we have not only enlarged every department, but have added many new conveniences, including a Personal Loan Department, an elevator, a Night Depository and year-'round air conditioning.

At the same time the entire building has been renovated and redecorated, old banking equipment replaced with new, the old vault dismantled, and a thoroughly modern vault installed.

The new vault is equipped with the latest protective devices, and its strength and durability are evidenced by the more than 200 tons of steel and reinforced concrete required for its construction.

We are, therefore, better equipped than ever to render prompt and efficient service. We hope you will make increasing use of our facilities.

Sincerely yours

THE LIBERTY NATIONAL BANK

U. S. Bombers Help Guard Singapore

Australian Air Units and Indian Troops Defend Base

By Hallett Abend

Copyright by New York Times

Singapore—Australian airmen are conspicuous on the streets of Singapore, and Lockheed bombers are so often seen in the air around and above the city that it is revealing no military secret to say that there are strong and efficient Australian air units based at Sembawang, about a dozen miles outside the city, in the general direction of the great naval base.

The Sembawang Airfield not long ago was a hilly region covered with rubber trees and patches of secondary jungle. Several hills were cut away, the contour of the land was changed, the vegetation was removed, and today there is a great airfield, flat as a good polo field, and nearby a cluster of hangars, repair shops, barracks, offices and other buildings including a hospital, a motion picture theater and a swimming pool.

The equipment consists of "a certain number" of American-made Lockheed bombers. They were ordered before the war began, were delivered in Australia in February and March of this year, and were brought to Singapore early last summer.

Target Would Vanish

Having seen, in Shanghai in 1937, the terrific havoc single Japanese bombs made at the Chinese air establishments at Hungjao and elsewhere near the city, I commented that the Sembawang layout, as at present constituted, provides a particularly vulnerable target for enemy airmen.

"Oh, in case of hostilities, much of this would vanish overnight," I was told.

Presumably here, as in England today, hostilities would bring an immediate decentralization of hangars and repair plants. It would be particularly simple and easy, in this land of lush vegetation, to cut a couple of dozen lanes into the forested surrounding countryside and to throw up many hangars and small shops of corrugated iron, well camouflaged or hidden in the thick brush.

With a radiating arrangement of feeder lanes of this kind the enemy would have no visible target except the landing field itself. Bombing the entire perimeter of the field would be a costly and probably largely fruitless project, even if the enemy has uncontested command of the air, which at Singapore he would not have.

India Raising Army

Singapore is getting defense forces from India, which has decided to raise an army of about 500,000 men, already lists more than 100,000 voluntary recruits, and early in November officially announced that 60,000 trained men had been sent overseas and were "now assisting in the defense of India's outer bastions."

One of the most strategically important of those "outer bastions" is Singapore, and near this city is to be found an Indian antiaircraft regiment, composed of Indian troops serving in the British army, not in the Indian army. This unit is the Second Antiaircraft Regiment, Hongkong-Singapore Royal Artillery.

The regiment is distinctive in that nearly all the enlisted men are Hindu Jats, a warlike people from the United Provinces and eastern Punjab. The Jat, as a fighting man, has a long and creditable history.

Jats made excellent fighting records in Mesopotamia during the World War, and also have distinguished themselves on India's northwest frontier as units of the Indian army.

Decades ago, when the first British forces penetrated toward Delhi, the Jats administered to them their first real defeats. Later, however, at the time of the Mutiny, the Jats assisted the British and ever since have loyally supported the empire.

More Recruits Arrive

Recruiting still continues briskly in India and recruits arrive at Singapore in a regular flow. The men in the ranks are between 18 and 24. Indian officers and a nucleus of trained and experienced noncommissioned officers were obtained on volunteer transfer from cavalry and infantry units of the Indian army.

The regiment has only a handful of British officers, assigned from the royal artillery. In great measure it is officered by Indian Subadars and Jemidars, who hold King's commissions. The senior Indian officer of the regiment is Subadar Maj. Rakhtawar Singh, who has a son in the ranks.

India is now manufacturing hundreds of tons of armor plate monthly, and in 1941 will produce more than 3,000 armored vehicles. India is producing a large export surplus of munitions and other war materials, and will soon begin training 300 air force pilots and 2,000 ground mechanics. Airplanes will be produced from factories now being built in India and airdromes are being rapidly multiplied and expanded.

Nazi News Mix-up Hints Split in Reich

Transocean Denies Threats Reported Made to Turkey

By G. E. R. Gedye.

Copyright by New York Times

Istanbul, Turkey.—An extraordinary statement has been received by the semiofficial Turkish news agency, Agence Anatolie, from the German propaganda news service, Transocean, in connection with two "sensational" communiques issued by the latter.

The first, which used extremely threatening language about Turkey and tried to make bad blood between her and Russia, was declared explicitly to be based on statements made by the German ambassador, Franz Von Papen, to press representatives in Berlin. The second was the communique of two days ago declaring that the "Turkish equation" must be solved immediately.

The Agence Anatolie says that Transocean has now declared that the two communiques in question "should not be considered as emanating for them," as their transmitters are hired at certain hours of the day to "certain foreign agencies, which use them to transmit their own stories." Without further comment, the Agence Anatolie points out that both the communiques in question were marked "copyright by Transocean," both at the beginning and the end of the communiques, and were sent to Berlin on the usual Tranocean wave lengths.

The value which should be attached to these excuses of Transocean is indicated by the fact that the first communique, allegedly citing Herr Von Papen, is now over a fortnight old. Although it was denied by Herr Von Papen on his return to Ankara more than a week ago, it is only today that Transocean advances transparent excauses.

Increase in Training Station Facilities Helps Ease Acute Personnel Problem of U. S. Fleet

By Hanson W. Baldwin

Copyright by New York Times

In the past two months the acute personnel problem of the United States fleet has been materially eased.

Last summer and as late as September officers in ships in the Pacific were considerably worried over the lack of man power aboard ship. Despite the seriousness of the Far Eastern situation and the increasing tension with Japan, ships of the fleet did not have their peacetime quotas.

There was no dearth of recruits, but there was, at first, a lack of adequate training station facilities to process them, and most of the new recruits in the summer months, instead of being sent to the ships of the battle force and scouting force in the Pacific, went to new ships just commissioned, to old ships recommissioned, or to auxiliaries purchased and added to the Navy list.

The enlisted personnel of the Navy increased by more than 10,000 men between the latter part of May and mid-August, but of this number only a few more than 500 went to ships in the Pacific—which comprise the fighting power of our Navy and the bulk of our first line of defense.

Based at Hawaii

The situation was further complicated by the fact that experienced men aboard ships of the fleet, whose enlistments had expired, did not tend to reenlist aboard the ship to which they were assigned.

The bulk of the fleet has been based in the Hawaiian Islands for months; there are no facilities for the enlisted men's families there, even if the men could afford the expense of bringing their families to the islands. As a result many men who are finishing their "hitches" are going back to their home towns, there to reenlist either for short duty or for new ships, which will give them a chance to see their families, and an opportunity for more favorable living conditions and congenial recreation than can be found in overcrowded Hawaii.

A material increase in training station facilities, the ordering of naval reserve units to active duty, diversion of most of the recent recruits and the sending of leave detachments to the mainland to Pacific ships has now materially improved what was for a time a serious situation. Nearly all ships in the Pacific, certainly all combatant ships, now have at least their peacetime complements; many are considerably above this allowance; some are up to wartime strengths.

The Navy's enlisted strength today is about 178,000, as compared to about 136,000 last May. About 164,000 of this total are regulars, the rest reserves ordered to active duty. It is planned, under a recent executive order, to increase the Navy's strength by next July to a total of about 232,000, 205,000 of them regulars. The eventual total needed for the so-called "two-ocean" Navy will be between 460,000 and 500,000 enlisted men at the beginning of the 1946 fiscal year.

Officer strength will also have to increase from the present 12,000 to an eventual 32,000. Part of this increase will be accomplished by ordering reserve and retired officers to active duty, if necessary for the duration of the emergency. The Navy Department now has authority to do this with or without the consent of the officers and even the 31,908 men who are members of the Navy's volunteer reserves are now liable to call. It is not expected, however, that many of these or many more retired officers, will be ordered to active duty in the near future.

The Navy also expects to supply its officer needs by an influx of so-called "ninety-day wonders"—the youngsters who are now receiving three months' intensive training and then are given commissions as reserve ensigns. Moreover a building program at the Naval Academy at Annapolis which will expand the academy's capacity to a five-appointment, 3,000 midshipmen basis, is now under way, and next year's first class will be graduated in February instead of in June.

The officer situation for the moment and for the immediate future is not, therefore, serious, and so far as the ships in the Pacific are concerned, the enlisted personnel situation has been materially improved in the past few months. Nevertheless a considerable bottleneck in trained petty officers is anticipated.

The flow of new ships to the fleet, and the Navy—which requires long-term service men—wants only such volunteers and will not take any trainees. Recruits are signing up for the Navy at the rate of 8,000 a month (in November); this rate is expected to increase to 10,000 or more soon.

The four naval training stations in the country, where recruits are given basic instruction in the lore of the sea—San Diego, Great Lakes, Norfolk and Newport—have already been expanded from a total capacity of 7,300 in August to a present capacity of 11,250, which will be further increased to 20,000 by February 1.

The normal peacetime period of recruit training of 12 weeks was first reduced to eight weeks, and now to five weeks; recruits are now finishing their basic training as well as their more advanced training aboard ship, but the recruit training period ashore at the training stations will probably be increased again later.

The rapid training of recruits, however, will not provide petty officers, for it takes months and years to make skilled naval petty officers. The minimum service requirements for advancements to ratings below that of chief petty officer have been considerably shortened; the Navy's school system has been intensified and the ships of the fleet, now filling up to 100 per cent war complement, are busy training the recent joined "boots," or recruits, and in developing suitable petty officer material.

Eventually it is hoped to boost the complement of ships to 115 per cent of war strength, in order to provide a pool of trained men as new ships are commissioned. Most noticeable shortages will probably be in technical and skilled ratings—which require long study and experience.

Trained radio men in the naval reserves has been a major problem; there is also a great difficulty in aviation branch ratings. To remedy this latter defect, the new naval air station at Jacksonville, Fla., will commence training aviation mechanics in January, and will eventually work up to a student capacity of 3,000.

The Navy's aviation pilot training program is also being materially stepped up. When the expansion started last May, the Navy had some 2,600 to 2,800 pilots in active service; its present plans call for a naval aviation numbering about 15,000 planes by 1945 or 1946, which will require about 22,000 pilots.

A training program which at its peak will produce about 600 pilots every month is now being set up, with the facilities of the famous naval air station at Pensacola, Fla., as its nucleus and with additional pilot training centers at Corpus Christi, Tex., Jacksonville and Miami, Fla. Pensacola will be stepped up to an entry rate of 300 a month by June 30, 1941.

At Jacksonville 200 aviation cadets a month are expected to enter by July 1, 1941, while Corpus Christi will not reach its peak until later—an entry rate of 300 aviation cadets a month by July 1, 1942 (this date is to be advanced, if possible). Miami will be a specialist advanced training center where men who already have their wings will be sent from the fleet for advanced training.

Pensacola will draw its material from the Regular Army; Jacksonville and Corpus Christi will be supplied with aviation cadets, who are first enlisted from civilian life in the Naval Reserves as seamen, second class, and given a month's preliminary training at 13 Naval Reserve aviation bases scattered all over the country (three additional ones are now being built, at Atlanta, Dallas and New Orleans). Some 50 per cent of the candidates for wings are expected to be eliminated in this first month's training; of those who go on to train at Jacksonville and Corpus Christi, about 75 per cent are expected to finish the entire course.

Axis May Face Decisive Test This Winter

Starvation, Cold Stalk Millions Now Ruled by 'New Order'

By Kirke L. Simpson

Associated Press Staff Writer

The cold gloom of Europe's second war winter is closing in amid multiplying signs that it may see the Nazi-Fascist "new order" fellowship put to a supreme and perhaps decisive test.

Imponderable factors preclude even a guess as to where or how the war will end. Among the horsemen of horror loosed on Europe by the war to make this probably the most tragic Christmas season the Old World has ever known are starvation and freezing cold for tens of million of non-combatants.

There are discernable, however, certain symptomatic items indicating that there may be graver concern over the winter outlook in Axis Europe than in London. They give the lie to the Nazi-Fascist assumption that mankind in the mass can be dragooned by force alone into a new way of life.

Italian Morale Totters

Intimations of tottering national morale point now toward Italy, not England. No other reasonable explanation of the Italian army's fiasco in Greece has been offered. It may have stemmed from Italian public distaste, extending into the ranks of Mussolini's best troops, for the war and the Axis partnership.

Tragic blundering by Italian strategists and army staffs alone cannot account for Greece's rout of her attackers against great odds of numbers and modern battle gear. The Italian army in Albania was hand picked and carefully prepared for its invasion job. It was composed of forces recruited from northern Italy, from the Italian Alps. Those Italian units proved the toughest fighters of her World War armies, yet in this war they failed at the first test against a foe utterly inferior in numbers and equipment.

It is now revealed by Washington Government reports on Italy's economic plight that the British blockade has been grinding for months at Italian morale. Sharply rationed food and skyrocketing prices are noted. That is all Italy has thus far gleaned from Mussolini's great adventures so far in Ethiopia, Spain and Greece.

Essential Pillars Lacking

By contrast, in bomb-tortured England there is no hint of declining morale. Bright visions of delivering a finishing stroke at Italy are reflected in London war news. The essential pillars of the Hitler-conceived "new order" structure for Continental Europe are lacking still. Spain in the west and Bulgaria in the east are still standing aloof.

An upsurge of French public reaction has thwarted the Hitler-Laval hopes for an effective political union between Berlin and Vichy. Intimations of popular "Free French" demonstrations in both German-occupied and unoccupied France leak through censorships.

In Nazi-conquered Norway, Holland and Belgium the same story is told day by day. Sporadic instances of increasing passive resistance to German mandates and occasional sniping at Nazi patrols dot the news. Quite clearly the first defeat-bred public apathy and despair are giving way across the Channel to hope instilled by Britain's sturdy stand and Greek valor.

Joan Crawford Will Quit Films If Not Starred

By the United Press

New York.—If she ever ceases to get star billing in the movies, Joan Crawford will quit Hollywood cold and go into hiding with her adopted daughter, Christina.

At least that is what the red-haired, one-time chorus girl declared today in her New York apartment where she has spent the last six months having "the first vacation in my life."

"I've worked all my life," she said, wide-eyed and serious. "I think I'd die if I stopped working—but I'd quit the movies cold if I ever started to slip from the star class."

Only one other thing could take Miss Crawford away from the screen. That is another marriage.

Doubts Remarriage

"I really don't think I'll ever marry again," she said. "But if I did—and God knows, there's only the vaguest chance—I'd make marriage my career, and say good-by to acting."

Moreover, her last marriage, to Franchot Tone, convinced her, she added, that privacy was essential to happiness.

"I've always let the public in on every thought—every dream I've ever had. Twice I've ruined my life fighting to keep my happiness. Next time—if ever there is a next time—I'm keeping my love-life to myself."

Dressed in a red wool dress with no jewelry but a diamond ankle bracelet adorned with a ruby heart, Miss Crawford said that she had come to New York for only two months, but had stayed six. She expected to return soon, she said, to start work in a picture called "A Woman's Face." She said she didn't know who her leading man would be—but that there were three actors whom she had never played with but would love to be starred with.

First, Charles Boyer.

"In, of course, a great love story. I'm dying to work with Boyer. He has so much appeal."

She ran her long scarlet-tipped fingers through her hair and continued:

"And I'd adore to work with Tyrone Power. Tyrone is the most beautiful thing I've ever seen. Another actor I would love to work with is Cary Grant."

Of those actors with whom she has acted already, Miss Crawford said that Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy and Jimmy Stewart were her favorites.

"Clark and Spence really give you something in a scene. They speed things up."

No Play for Broadway

Most of her time in New York has been spent in shopping and seeing plays, she said, and although she did her "darnedest" to find a play she could act in on Broadway she said that so far she had been unsuccessful.

Her shopping, she added, showed more results.

"You know, I just hate hats," she confessed, "but they seem to have an irresistible attraction for me and I buy them by the dozens. Then I wear them for about a half and hour and take them off."

At the moment Miss Crawford has, by actual count, 66 hats in her wardrobe.

"I guess that's where my money goes," she said. "Isn't it awful?"

Churches Mark Anniversaries At Services

Pastoral, congregational and other anniversaries held the spotlight in many services in the Washington area Sunday.

Foundry Methodist Church continued its 126th anniversary observance with Episcopalians as special guests. Gorsuch Methodist Church climaxed its ninetieth birthday fete, and Christ Lutheran Church of Bethesda, celebrated the sixth anniversary of its founding.

Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, president of the Washington Federation of Churches, was felicitated on the fourth anniversary of his pastorate at First Baptist Church, and the Rev. M. P. German on his eighth year as leader of the Bethany Baptist congregation. Albright Memorial Evangelical Church marked the first anniversary of its church appreciation program.

Inspection of ADA Project Conducted

A series of special inspection tours of the Ellen Wilson Dwelling, a District Alley Dwelling Authority project, is being conducted from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. each day this week.

Included in the tour will be a visit to the demonstration house, in the 700 block of Sixth Street Southeast. Members of the Friendship House staff and clubs have finished the demonstration house to show how comfortably a home can be furnished at low cost. Parties will start from Friendship House each day on the hour.

D.C. One-Act-Play Group to Plan For 1941 Contest

The District One Act Play Tournament Committee will meet at 5 p. m. today to determine the time and place of the 1941 contests.

About 15 groups have already entered the tournament. Copies of the rules may be got at the Community Center offices in the Force Building, at 1740 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, where today's meeting will be held.

The Community Center announced that the Columbia Light Opera Co. will present "Florodora" at 8:15 p. m. Thursday and Friday at Roosevelt High School auditorium. On Thursday, December 12, the Masquers of Roosevelt Community Center will present "Bachelor Born," and the Troupers of East Washington Community Center will present "Cuckoos Nest" Friday, December 13.

Britain, Spain Sign Commercial Accord

London to Free Funds to Madrid For Purchases

By Thomas J. Hamilton
Copyright by New York Times

Madrid, Dec. 2.—British Ambassador Sir Samuel Hoare and Spanish Foreign Minister Serrano Suner today signed a commercial agreement which will provide Spain with several hundred thousand pounds sterling for purchases in the United Kingdom and its sterling area.

This money consisted of various frozen credits that Spain holds in London, the proceeds of Spanish-owned British securities impounded last July along with other foreign credits; the proceeds of Spanish exports to the British Empire not included in the Anglo-Spanish clearing agreement arranged last March; and miscellaneous funds.

A special account is to be created to handle these funds. Spain will have considerably more pounds when she ships to Britain half of her exportable orange crop, but this will not be available until January and meanwhile every sixpence helps.

[Under the March agreement Britain agreed to lend Spain £2,000,000 ($8,000,000) to be spent on goods, including raw materials, originating in nations whose currency is linked with the pound sterling.]

Step to Trade Pact

Copyright by New York Times

London, Dec. 2.—The agreement signed today in Madrid is not in any sense a trade pact, it was said here.

As a matter of fact, negotiations for a full-dress trade agreement with Spain which may include the extension of credits by Britain, are now proceeding. It is probable that today's agreement which is said to be primarily one for payments alone, is a preliminary to the trade treaty which is now being inaugurated.

The foreign office tonight would say nothing at all about the agreement beyond that it "regulates payments between the sterling area and Spain, and that it settles other matters of details which had been thought possible of causing friction."

There is no doubt that the British are doing their best to woo the Spaniards. Despite the fact that German troops can move into Spain with or without Generalissimo Franco's permission, the British still think they can keep Spain out of the war.

To that end they are giving the Spaniards almost anything they want.

What they have given them by the latest agreement is not known but from the official reticence, it is, perhaps, a good guess that they have given them something, despite all insistence that it is a payments agreement only.

One reason for reticence here is that the United States is in on this deal. The United States has been backing up the British campaign in Spain by pointing out to the Spanish government that it need not expect any food aid from the United States if it enters the war on the Axis side.

In fact the British and the United States have been working together in pointing out that Spain as a neutral can expect to get from the United States just enough food and raw materials for her own use; if she enters the war she will not even get that.

Agreement Considered Especially Significant

By the Associated Press

The agreements is considered especially significant in view of Spain's uncertain position in warring Europe. Although Spain was declared to have cast her lot "spiritually" with the Rome-Berlin Axis after Serrano Suner's recent visit to Rome and Berlin and Franco's October 23 meeting with Adolf Hitler, she still has not formally aligned herself with the Axis.

At the time of Serrano Suner's visit to the Axis capitals reports were current that Adolf Hitler was seeking Spanish authorization for the movement of troops through Spain for an attack on Gibraltar.

Since then Britain has been pushing her own diplomatic negotiations with Spain, with Sir Samuel Hoare taking an active part.

Early this month a Spanish air mission flew to London on the British government's invitation to "watch England under German attacks."

In mid-November informed diplomatic quarters in Washington reported Spain had requested a $100,000,000 loan from the United States to feed and rehabilitate a hungry and impoverished Spain. Some Administration officials were understood to have looked with disfavor on the request, particularly in view of attacks by the government-controlled Spanish press on the United States.

Reich Envoy Feels Out in Cold During Mexican Inaugural

Copyright by New York Tribune Inc.

Mexico City, Dec. 2.—Germany's Minister to Mexico, Baron Freiherr H. Rudt von Collemberg, indicated today the Third Reich felt left out in the cold in the atmosphere of friendship and solidarity manifested here in the first 24 hours of the rule of Mexico's new president, Gen. Manuel Avila Camacho.

The German minister, who joined diplomats of 30 other foreign nations today in congratulating President Avila Camacho at the national palace, told this correspondent that he wished Germany was "in on the spirit of animation" which he said he observed on all sides of him.

Somewhat at a disadvantage today after several rendezvous with a wine steward, who showed no favoritism, the Reich minister welcomed the approach of a friendly stranger and showed no evidence of dismay when he learned that he was speaking for publication.

"Of course," Baron von Collemberg said, "you must understand my delicate position. But it is no secret that we would like to be in on the spirit of animation that seems to be the order of the day in Mexico. Germany has no quarrel with Mexico—nor with any other nation here represented, for that matter."

Canada Cuts Imports of U.S. Luxury Goods

By the Associated Press

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—Canadians must do without passenger automobiles and a variety of processed foods, clothing, cigars and cigarettes imported from the United States and other nonsterling countries, Finance Minister J. L. Ilsley announced today in the House of Commons.

By import license, taxation and tariff reduction, Ilsley moved to prevent dissipation of needed foreign exchange on nonessential commodities and to increase trade with the United Kingdom.

To discourage expenditures on luxuries and to prevent undue expansion of Canadian industries which might better be engaged in war work, an excise tax of 25 per cent on the manufacturers' price has been imposed on radios and tubes, cameras, phonographs, gas and electric stoves, washing machines, vacuum cleaners and a number of other home conveniences.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King, meanwhile, told Commons that Britain's position is stronger now than at any time since the fall of France, and that with the help of the Dominions and the United States the tide of war was slowly turning against the Axis.

Nevertheless, he warned Canadians against complacently looking forward to certain victory, saying that "there had never been anything hitherto comparable" to Germany's present military strength and that the armies which swept through Belgium and France not only still are intact but may be even stronger than they were in June.

"The one thing that . . . may save the world this supreme tragedy is the might of Britain, strengthened, supported and sustained by the power of the British dominions and India, the help of the United States and such aid as it may yet be within the power of other liberty-loving peoples to give."

Total Sale Unchanged

Canada's action is not expected to change greatly the total sale of United States goods to the Dominion, although it will make some alteration in the type of goods sold.

Sales of war materials to Canada have been gradually increasing. It is believed likely that such sales will go on increasing as the American economy turns more and more to producing arms and other war implements.

The Commerce Department announced only Monday that exports to Canada in October amounted to $76,682,000 compared with $69,720,000 in October, 1939, and $63,252,000 in September of this year.

The department did not break down the October exports by categories but trade experts said that undoubtedly the total of "luxury" items was far below what it was a year ago.

Egypt Moving to War on Italy As Cairo Protests Bombings

By the United Press

Cairo, Dec. 2.—Agitation for an Egyptian declaration of war against Italy, crystallized by Greece's military successes, increased tonight after announcement that Egypt has delivered a protest to Italy against Fascist bombings of nonmilitary objectives.

Premier Sirry Pasha, replying to questioning in the Chamber of Deputies, announced the dispatch of the protest to Rome and said that since June 12 Italian air bombings in Egypt have killed 155 persons and injured 426 others, all civilians.

The premier added that 97 homes had been completely destroyed and 102 others damaged.

The agitation for an Egyptian declaration of war on Britain's side is particularly strong among the young people of the country.

These young Egyptians point out that Egypt's national dignity is being hurt by allowing another power—the British—to assume full responsibility for the country's safety.

Other circles regard the war purely from the standpoint of what will be Egypt's position after it is over. They feel that if they don't join with the British their recently acquired independence may be jeopardized.

They also are seeking advantage of the present conditions to further steady Egyptianization of the country by replacing foreigners, particularly those from Axis countries, who are in official positions of commercial establishments.

Although not directly participating in the war, Egypt today is an armed camp.

Even before September, 1939, Britain maintained large forces in Egypt for defense of the Suez Canal and as a year-round training ground.

Since Italy entered the war this force has increased tremendously. The streets of Cairo, Alexandria and Port Said are thronged with stalwart khaki-clad men from all parts of the British Empire. They guard the desert facing the Italian army which Gen. Rudolfo Graziani led across 60 miles of these sands.

Fight Continues at Thai Border

By the Associated Press

Hanoi, French Indo-China, Dec. 2.—Fighting on the border between Thailand (Siam) and French Indo-China persisted without letup tonight.

Thai planes were reported to have twice attacked the 500-ton Indo-Chinese naval vessel Beryle in the Gulf of Siam.

Nine bombs were dropped without damage, a communique said, and the ship's anti-aircraft guns eventually drove off the squadron with damage to one bomber.

Fighting apparently centered around the border town of Thakhek, reported bombed twice by Thai planes.

The Indo-Chinese communique reporting the Beryle attack also said Thai troops took over Bandong Island, in the Mekong River 40 miles below Vientiane, in northern Indo-China.

Bangkok, Thai's capital, still is out of communication with Hanoi.

(Domei, Japanese news agency, reported skirmishes and artillery fire at several places along the Mekong River. In a wireless report heard in New York, it also said Thai planes dropped about ten bombs in a raid on Thakhek Saturday.)

Poor communications, censorship and the natural fastnesses of jungle and mountains hid details of the fighting in what the French admitted was a grave situation.

(Radio reports in Vichy, France, indicated the fighting was becoming serious. A French government spokesman said that the colony's troubles with Thai in the last two months have been due to pressure by nationalist elements on the premier of Thailand, who was forced to give satisfaction by at least "tokens" of warlike action.

(This official declared Thai planes started the aerial attacks which have been made on both sides of the border. He declared "completely baseless," however, foreign reports that the troubles had reached a veritable state of war.)

Traffic Cases In D. C.

Revival of interest in the deserving proposal to assign one judge permanently to Traffic Court, instead of continuing the month-by-month rotation, has come at a time when the status of District legislation for the courts is somewhat confused. The Municipal and Police Courts (the latter of which embraces Traffic Court) would be combined under a provision of the Kennedy bill for governmental reorganization, now nominally awaiting action in the Senate. During the present session an attempt has been made to integrate the Schulte bill, providing for a full-time traffic judge, with the Kennedy bill, but in face of objections, this Schulte bill still remains in the hands of the House District Committee.

Judges of the Police Court have been leading opponents of the plan for a full-time traffic judge. They point out that he would handle none but the minor cases, as the Traffic Court does now, while only three judges would be left to deal with traffic jury trials and the normal cases of the jury, District and United States branches of Police Court. This would seem to leave the impression that the judges are more anxious for an increase in their personnel.

It is possible, however, for judges who clear their dockets early in the day to hear cases transferred from other, more crowded courts. Sometimes they do. At least a few legal observers believe that if this procedure were followed systematically with an equal distribution of work, there would be no congestion. Passage of the Kennedy bill and consequent merger of the Municipal and Police Courts would provide a total of nine judges among whom a distribution of work could be made, and surely that number is sufficient to allow for the segregation of the Traffic Court function.

Faced with this argument the judges would, perhaps, change their approach, and say that even a monthly turn in Traffic Court might defeat its own end. At any rate, Judge Casey said the other night that to inflict traffic cases on a single judge "day after day" would have the effect of making him a "second prosecutor." However, if a judge could be found for Traffic Court who was interested in it, there is no reason why he should lose his judicial balance. His constant touch with traffic cases, on the contrary, should make for equal justice for all.

With all these circumstances in mind, proponents for a full-time traffic judge should institute a campaign for converts before the next Congress convenes. It may be found unwise—however logical—to attach the plan to a reborn Kennedy bill, for no controversial clauses should be allowed to interfere with the progress of this vital reform. But a permanent traffic judge is desirable, for reasons which we have explained in the past, and would be even more feasible if the Kennedy bill should succeed, in view of the larger personnel provided for in that measure.

A College Property

Having successfully withstood proposals that it sell its 145-year-old campus, St. John's College is trying to save 1.35 acres that the Annapolis Housing Authority wishes to condemn. The originally announced purpose of the project was to house naval personnel. Although the tract now in dispute was acquired as recently as 1927, it is vital to the college. Almost dead a few years ago, this institution is expanding under new leadership, and has an unusual curriculum which has attracted wide attention. It is bad for any school to have its plant scattered over a city, and even those who are most interested may hesitate to give financial support if the college's future is circumscribed by loss of its lands.

This peril to necessary institutions should be enough to deter the Housing Authority. Another deterrent comes from Secretary of the Navy Knox who, after a conference with President Roosevelt, has assured college officials that he does not want to appropriate the land and has promised, furthermore, to support withdrawal of the suit. Yet the power to go ahead with condemnation proceedings rested in the local Housing Authority, and the Authority has not announced any intention to give up.

Undoubtedly the location of a housing project in Annapolis is a difficult problem. Members of the Authority contend that because nearly half the property in Annapolis is tax-free, the exemption of any more would endanger sound administration of the city's affairs. Therefore, for the housing project, which would be tax-free, they seek land already in that category. Naturally such holdings are rarely available. Also there are obstacles in the way of acquiring property outside the city. It would be well to consider, however, whether any housing project is worth irreparable damage to a time-honored institution of learning.

Exit Lorraine

The land whence Lafayette fled at the age of 19 to enlist in the American cause of independence has officially become absorbed in Nazi Germany. This is Lorraine. Already the French-speaking people had been poured into the other provinces of France on Nazi orders, presumably because they are held to be unassimilable. The entity is now wiped out simply by official edict of the local Gauleiter. Lorraine, says the German administrator of Saarpfallz-Lorraine, "has ceased to exist," and the territory will be brought into a new German province called Westmark.

But the real crushing of Lorraine, as the Nazis well know, can come only when there are no Lorrainers left. It is the problem of Poland all over again, and the method is the same. So the Nazis knew whereof they were doing when they ordered the expulsion of the dour Lorrainers. One wonders, however, why they decided to leave any at all. For the non-French-speaking, a tiny minority, include some who, like the old lady upon whom Rene de Chambrun was first billeted, are not one whit less animated with the authentic French spirit. They don't know the tongue because they were the victims of the ban on the French language which the Germans imposed upon Lorraine after its conquest by Germany in 1871.

A border folk like the Lorrainers, holding in their race memory the sound of the conqueror's boot over their fields, couldn't afford to get soft. They had to live, like the Finns, always with one finger on the trigger. But all they could do as a small province was to be a model in sacrifice and duty for France. In politics they stayed stolidly conservative, voting for the men who, like the Lorrainer Poincaré, believed with Adam Smith that "defense comes before opulence." In duty they gave gladly in money and toil and land to the building of the Maginot Line. At arms they were among the truly valiant, with the Iron Division, of World War fame, as the testimonial of their soldierliness. A saying is part of French folklore that everybody in Lorraine is born at least a corporal, if not a sergeant.

This is the breed who are streaming into Vichy's France, where the Lorrainers are little known. Marshal Petain, whose neglect to convey sympathy to Alsatians and Lorrainers hasn't passed unnoticed in those provinces, is now calling upon unoccupied France to be hospitable. But shelter for the Lorrainers outside their ancestral enclave will not be home to them till Lorraine comes back into her own. They are particularistic, these Lorraine folk, like the Vermonters; men and women who keep alive a fierce spirit of locality which may be, as John Stuart Mill said, the bane of improvement, but which is a grand fortifier of character.

When this war came they uncomplainingly inundated 229 of their villages lying between the German border and the Maginot Line in order to keep Lorraine French. The sacrifice was in vain, and they must now live in what they will call exile till the day dawns when the spirit that informed Lorraine, again informs the entire country. Simply to wipe out Lorraine, which never was a geographical expression, but a deep heartbeat, is easier to say than to do. The Gauleiter has an assignment as tough as the Lorrainers.

Investment Trouble

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. sold $140,000,000 of its debentures last week to 14 insurance companies. The company thereby avoided registration of the new issues under the Securities Act and dispensed with the services of underwriters. In this instance the speed and ease of the financing operation rather than the factor of costs appear to have weighed the scales in favor of private placement instead of public offering of the new issues. Generally speaking, however, the desire to avoid the cost of registration with the SEC and save underwriters' commissions accounts for the mounting volume of privately placed issues.

This problem is becoming a serious one. It is estimated that about $2,500,000,000 of securities have been sold directly to a few insurance companies during the past five years, while the total volume of privately placed issues is very much greater. This trend toward private placements, naturally enough, is highly alarming to investment bankers—they are consequently deprived of a large volume of business. But private placements are also undesirable from the viewpoint of the investing public, since they enable issuers of new securities to escape compliance with the registration provisions of the law intended for their protection. To be sure, privately placed issues are as a rule gilt-edged offerings which conservative investment groups are eager to buy. Nevertheless, opportunities for abuse exist which indicate the need for plugging this loophole in the Securities Act, and reinforce the demand, moreover, for a revision of the Securities Act to make the financing of new issues less tedious, time-consuming and expensive.

Such a need also is a patent in behalf of the noninstitutional small investor. Private placements tend to concentrate large blocks of new issues of an especially sound character in the hands of a few powerful investment institutions. That, too, is socially undesirable. A wide distribution of sound investment issues is much to be preferred, but it cannot be secured without the services of investment bankers to act as intermediaries between issuing companies and investing public. If the cream of the investment business is taken away from these intermediaries by resort to private placement, the offerings to the general public must diminish and relatively deteriorate.

The problems arising from the increase in private placements, therefore, concern all potential investors, large and small, not simply investment bankers who complain of shrinking business or companies who find it advantageous to circumvent SEC registration requirements.

War-Time Smoke

For some time there have been reports that the British miss their Virginia tobacco. The current swap of airplanes for Turkish leaf, for example, is said to have delighted the Turks, but to have spread a certain amount of gloom among British smokers. Old tastes linger with the smoker, and the report that the British are still loyal to Sir Walter Raleigh will please the Virginians, if not the Turks. For the cessation of Virginia's tobacco exports to Great Britain brought not a little travail on this side of the Atlantic. When the British cut off use of foreign exchange for American tobacco purchases in the midst of the 1939 auctioning season, the markets closed, and serious dislocations were averted only by the intervention of the United States Government. Now the growers are operating on a strictly curtailed three-year program, and Uncle Sam is holding millions of pounds of leaf on the assumption that British buying will be resumed someday. It looks as if their hope is well founded.

Feminine Gestapo

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, one of the first effective advocates of feminine interest in extra-domestic affairs, now urges special attention to the family in the interest of peace and freedom. Speaking at a celebration in New York of the suffrage movement's centennial, she suggested an international mothers' Gestapo "to hunt out the world empire dreamers in infancy and use a spanking machine on them."

That's a fine idea if it can be made to work. But when Junior pulls Fido's ears and tries to stuff Tabby into the furnace, how is Mommy to know whether his actions betray a future tyrant or simply manifest a normal childhood? If Mrs. Catt can invent a way to prevent 2-year-olds from being dictators in the home, her fame among parents will overshadow any possible achievements of statesmanship.

SILVER STALLION

What was he doing there, the silver stallion,
Head high and tail that streamed aslant the wind
That all too perfect time in Indian summer
When the humming of bees in the aster grew faint and thinned?

All day I had marked the fields were white with horses,
Where were the boys and blacks that autumn hour
As the sun departing had slowly dimmed the mountains
That had been bronze and scarlet into a gentian flower;

Into a gentian, then to a deepening purple,
And the water lay still beyond the poplars' gold,
And there he stood outlined against the sunset
A silver stallion that never the earth had fouled.

Till the curve of the road was rounded I dared not look again,
For I knew the field was empty, the water mirrored the night,
Only my ears caught vaguely a rush of wings uplifting,
A shadow covered the mountain—the dark had swallowed the light.

V. F. Calverton

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: V. F. Calverton, well known author, editor and lecturer, had a host of friends in the District of Columbia who will lament his sudden passing in New York City Thanksgiving eve. In the early thirties he was a familiar figure in educational circles and on lecture platforms here. Like this correspondent, many of his local auditors must recall with sadness the death of a personality who discoursed upon the arts and sciences in relation to the social distempers of our time with memorable charm, urbanity and wide knowledge.

Although Calverton slipped this mortal coil when barely 40 years old, his amazing literary industry is attested by 16 volumes of published works, together with an imposing mass of essays and critical reviews which appeared in journals ranging from the abstrusely academic to the popular. From time to time The Washington Post has given conspicuous attention to these productions. For a number of years Calverton's compilation, "Anthology of Negro Prose and Poetry," was required reading at Howard University.

The New York Times of November 22, commenting editorially on his death, says: "Though Calverton wrote in many genres and many fields—sociology, literature, American history, the arts—he will doubtless be remembered chiefly as one of the first figures in this country to preach and practice "Marxist" literary criticism." While it is left to the majestic equality of time to set the final estimate upon the value of this criticism those who were happy to know him in Washington will long remember the blithe carefree and infectious spirit with which Calverton radiated the multifarious facets of his cultural interests.

Help The British

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The future security of this country and safety for our boys depends upon a complete British success and a crushing defeat of the German-Nazi regime. We should have foreseen this in September, 1939. Now it will be more difficult and costly to play our part in this terrible world crisis than it would have been 14 months ago. However, it is not too late for us to act if we do act at once, without further delay.

We should help the British to the limit with our moral support, with our financial backing, with our aircraft and munitions industry, our merchant shipping and our Navy—for patrol duty.

If Great Britain is defeated, woe be unto us. The Germans would assail us from the east and south and the Japanese from the west and south.

Citizen's Rights

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I hope a plain American citizen may be permitted a suggestion as to editorial policy in connection with the Dies Congressional Committee investigating un-American activities. The suggestion in mind is prompted by the wholesale condemnation of men as Communists with regard to activity not in unlawful sabotage, etc., but only in belonging to the Communist Party or in advocating Marxist doctrines.

It appears to be about time for some American editor to exercise his God-given freedom to urge the Dies Committee to investigate the un-American activity of its chairman and to point out that an American citizen, under the Bill of Rights, has as much right to be a Marxian Communist as Martin Dies has to be a Garner Republican.

Civilian Bombing

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After months of bombardments over the cities of England, Italy, Germany, France, Holland and Belgium, the peoples of Europe still continue to lead their daily lives. Citizens nerve-wrecked and shattered after sleepless nights still go on with their daily tasks. Night after night old women and old men are obliged to descend into damp, unhealthy cellars, risking bronchitis, pneumonia and possible death.

Those who are too sick to move are obliged to run still graver risks. The planes may strike and they may not. How can a generation keep on this way? How can children and new-born babes grow up into healthy human beings with such a start in life?

London still resists, tenaciously, indeed magnificently, carrying on under these appalling, inhuman conditions, living like rats. The bombing of cities has proved a failure as a demoralizing influence, as well as an efficacious military advantage.

Why is not this inexcusable destruction of cities stopped now? Immediately, on both sides, on all fronts, before every city of the belligerent countries is destroyed, demolished, reduced to a heap of ruins, and before hundreds of thousands of more citizens, old and young, who have nothing whatever to do with war and never wanted war, are rendered homeless, ill, incapacitated, driven crazy, if not actually wounded and killed.

Not in the history of the world has such an uncivilized, barbaric type of warfare been devised. It is only one step from this to the bombing of civilians with chemicals and poison gases. Then in truth we will have sunk to the lowest ebb mankind has ever reached. Yet no one, so far, at least, has come forward with the authoritative voice to call for halt.

Neither side will ask for cessation of civilian bombing. The mere suggestion would imply weakness and therefore a sign of the inferiority of vanquished, which neither side could be expected to admit.

But why, if this world be Christian at all, could not some neutral power intervene? It would not necessitate an interruption to hostilities nor cause an advantage or a loss to any belligerent nation. It would simply mean the end to the useless destruction of cities and of the minds and bodies of innocent men, women and children, which the whole world should welcome if one spark of decency still exists.

Labor's Rights

To the Editor of The Post— Sir: I would like to comment upon your recent editorial upon the strikes in defense industries in which you favor action which would outlaw attempts by labor to ask a just return. A short time ago there was a great cry for equal conscription of both labor and industry in our defense program. Yet now when labor uses its legal method in demanding from industry a fair increase in conditions, it is branded a traitor, while industry is not in the least berated for its part in the action. Certainly in a period when national unity is being fought for, labor's confidence should be kept by protecting all its rights. J. ALTON.

Three Arguments

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter by a C. Law Watkins in The Post of November 24 edition prompts this reply. Mr. Watkins' letter is rather an excellent example of the same sort of propaganda and misinformation that dragged us into our last futile effort to save democracy.

In the first place, in spite of quoted 5 to 2 odds against her, it hasn't quite been established that England can or will be defeated. But conceding that England will fall, I still insist that no one can definitely, or even with a gambler's degree of accuracy, say that Germany will attack the United States. To me, those who go around uttering such things are either, as Mr. Watkins himself says, "half educated," or more likely, just dupes who fall for the subtle British propaganda. Perhaps sometimes when Mr. Watkins cares to sit down and think the thing over, he may like to try and enumerate at least one good, sound, accurate and unemotional reason for his presumtion that Germany will attack the United States.

Secondly, by no stretch of the imagination or reasoning powers can England be properly called a democracy (just ask the Irish, the Scotch, the people of India, Egypt, Palestine, etc.), so why bother to save a false friend? If England can't save herself, then she isn't worth saving, as our rescue efforts in 1917 showed.

Thirdly, to say that our frontiers are in Europe and that if England falls we fall, is just some more subtle British propaganda of threadworn vintage but psychologically good, and for us Americans to believe it is a sign of weakness in ourselves. But then, England wants America weak, or just weak enough so that we will fall for their line and keep handing our airplanes, destroyers, etc. (which we ourselves need), and open up our peoples' pockets now that England "is near the end of her financial resources," to quote Lord Lothian, (which means in not-so-subtle language, "America, shell out—and fast.")

So, rather than gambling with America's future, I suggest that we make ourselves strong enough within to stand alone, if necessary, instead of depleting our defense by giving everything to an England which has never kept the world at peace when it suited her interests to have war. PAUL C. LENTZ.

Listened In?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An article in The Post of November 22 indicates the police had installed a dictograph and listened in on a conference between a prisoner and his attorney. If that article is correct and the police actually did, by dictograph, listen on a private conference between attorney and client a most amazing invasion of private rights has taken place.

It is a fundamental of our system that every man, no matter what he may be accused of, is entitled to counsel and to a fair trial. That is written in our fundamental law in the Constitution. The Sixth Amendment requires that persons accused shall have the assistance of counsel. Communications between attorney and client have always been privileged and confidential. That is necessary because confidential relations are imperative if there is to be an attorney and client relationship.

If the police have listened in on a conference between attorney and client, they have destroyed the right of the accused person to counsel. That would be an extremely serious invasion of private rights. It is difficult to believe that the police would do such a thing and if they have, then something should be done about it.

The Post Impressionist

Lobby Lotharios

IF HE EMERGES from the theater and responds to his sweetie's first remark with a clipped, impatient, "Yeah, yeah, I know!" you can be pretty certain that the couple has just witnessed an attraction starring Mr. Spencer Tracy.

And if she seems disposed to accept his crustiness with understanding and supine silence, they doubtless have been watching the adventures of one of the screen's more long-suffering young ladies who has put up with the hero's bad manners and restrained cruelty through several thousand feet of film without a whimper.

On the other hand, if the young lady seems inclined to make something of her escort's tough attitude and snaps back at him, perhaps Jean Arthur was in the cast, and if she suddenly knocks him kicking right under the bright lights of the marquee or spitefully bites his right ear, she is for the moment continuing the role in which she has been observing the irrepressible Lupe Velez or some other fiery Latin.

While he is sipping his after-theater "coke," a young blood who was quite normal at work behind the store counter will acquire the polished reserve of Herbert Marshall. His girl will forget the prosaities of typewriting and bookkeeping while she quaffs the icy drink through a straw with eyes upturned in a manner vaguely reminiscent of Loretta Young.

But there are also those afflictions the patent medicine ads call "cases of long standing." We know a young lady who persists in believing that she is the perfect counterpart of Hedy Lamarr. She has been gently and subtly discouraged from this myth for some months but shows marvelous tenacity in going to party after party, always with that guarded cynical little smile that made "Algiers" the masterpiece it was to her.

In college, we knew a boy who gave a very sincere portrayal of the then popular Valentino (our class is '29) from early September until well into the spring term. He even strolled about the campus in black velvet pants with red inserts. Once he seemed much better, but just then "Blood and Sand" came along and he suffered a terrible relapse.

Some of the professors showed the strain late in the year. Our Valentino was better versed in movies than mathematics. When asked a question on the latter subject, he would become resentful and instead of apologetically saying "unprepared" and trying to go back to sleep, would affix the singularly unimpressed professor with a baleful glare—just the kind the real Valentino would turn upon a charging bull or a murderous Arab chieftain. Our professor, unfortunately for this student, was neither a bull nor an Arab.

Frankly, we are in a poor position to criticize. Our only defense is that the malady ran its course by the time we reached early 'teen age. We got through the period of westerners (the two-reel soundless kind) with no more damage than alternately thinking we were a cowboy or Indian. It was the era of serials that made us decide to stop being merely one of several dozen ranchers and type ourselves.

We couldn't find a suitable part in either "The Perils of Pauline" or "The Diamond From the Sky," but then "The Exploits of Elaine" hit the town and we became "Craig Kennedy, the Scientific Detective."

The girl next door admirably portrayed the part played by Pearl White on the screen; but she suddenly left the cast when Mr. Kennedy nearly blew up the garage and her with it while performing one of his scientific experiments.

On the whole, however, the motion picture wields a salutary influence upon people inclined to discard their own character for another which they believe more engaging. For after all, it takes much less time to see a movie than to read a book and you can take our word for it, there is no fun in living on the same block with a girl who thinks she is Scarlett O'Hara the entire time she is perusing "Gone With the Wind."

Not long before our Craig Kennedy tragedy somebody gave us a book, one of whose characters was Jeff Matthews, a Northwest Mountie. The author caused us untold agony when he innocently wrote "Jeff Matthews removed his gun belt; lighted his pipe and expertly blew an arrow of smoke through a purplish ring he had exhaled."

We consumed bales of cornsilk trying to emulate Jeff. Sometimes we could make the ring and at other times the arrow, but never did we manage to combine the two.

If Jeff really did that trick, he is still our hero.

Three Days

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The average building tradesman must have read with some amusement Mr. Blumenberg's statement in The Post of November 21. If those 1,000 men who were discharged for incompetence each worked only one day of 8 hours at $1.25, then poor old Uncle Sam had to take it once more for $10,000 besides the constructors' cost, plus commission.

They must have a very special brand of business agents and foremen in the Baltimore area when it takes three days for them to find out if a man is a mechanic or not. In most sections a man has to be vouched for by two competent tradesmen, with a heavy fine placed on them if they vouch for an incompetent, or a prospective worker is given a try-out on the job at his own expense. But a three-day probation, ain't that something?

Except on the finest of buildings and residences, any competent architect, contractor or tradesman will admit that cost-plus work is wasteful and on work such as cantonments call for it is just so much money thrown away.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The War Of Nerves

IN THIS WAR of nerves there are continual changes of mood among many who are merely reporters or observers. For a few days the news is favorable and they are confident, even elated; then the news is bad and they are depressed to the point of anxiety and despair. It is a debilitating experience, which in its extreme forms may readily produce a nervous breakdown into a passive melancholy or into an hysteric, aimless over-activity. These casualties of the war of nerves are recognizable: either they cry out that all is lost and nothing can be done or that all will be saved if only this or that is done by the beginning of next week.

In fact, however, the crisis of our time must, in the nature of things, last for what will seem to us who live through it a very long while indeed; there is no conceivable way in which it can come to a quick end. For the whole of mankind is engaged and all the institutions of men, in such a convulsion there can be no short, cheap, and easy solution—and to imagine that one can predict the "outcome," prophesying one day, because the news is bad, that the Axis is "winning" and the next that it is not winning, is to betray one's own failure to have realized the scope and the depth of the conflict. The outcome is not in sight. It is not imaginable by any living man. For the outcome has still to be shaped by the will and the energies of multitudes of men. So, these alternating moods of pessimism and optimism are false in that they do not prepare our minds and spirits for the long ordeal through which our generation must pass. In that ordeal men will need to make themselves indomitable, and they cannot afford to waste their energy wondering from the newspaper headlines of one edition to the headlines of the next edition whether civilization is saved or is lost.

THIS NERVOUS instability originates in the deepest malady of modern society, in the loss by so many modern men of the conviction that the human will is free and that, therefore, each man has a personal moral responsibility for his acts and that what is going to happen in the future is going to be determined by what men do in the present. This is the central conviction on which Western civilization rests: the optimists, the pessimists, and the fatalists among us are men and women who have lost this controlling religious conviction.

If they are optimists, they delude themselves with the notion that all will turn out for the best; therefore, they need do nothing about it. If they are pessimists, they believe that all is lost and, therefore, they need do nothing about it. If they are pessimists, they think that it is the destiny of man to be tossed about helplessly like driftwood upon the tides of history. It all comes to the same thing: be they wishful and complacent, melancholy and inert, or, infected with some one of the new ideologies and therefore resigned, they all deny that man has a soul, that he has freedom and therefore that he has moral responsibility to himself, to other men, and to eternity. They sin, against the soul of man and their sin is the cause of their nervous instability.

IN THE PAST six months modern men have passed, some directly and others vicariously, through the most terrible and the most ennobling experience in the history of the modern world. For in this period which began with the miracle of Dunkirk, there has been revealed what modern societies had forgotten and ceased to believe in: that men can be free, not merely in the political sense but in the religious meaning of the word, free to collect themselves in all adversity and by the sheer force of the human will to become the masters rather than the victims of fate. This revelation that the ancient convictions about men are true is one of the very greatest events of a long epoch, transcending in importance and its consequences all the fluctuating incidents of battle, providing the people of the world with an armour of the soul and a sword of the spirit which has already altered and will surely alter more decisively the course of history.

For the first time since popular government came into being a whole people has faced the full fury of a total war, and by sheer tenacity and conviction withstood it. Their reward is that they have proved that modern society can be redeemed from the apathy, the cynicism, and the materialism which were destroying it more surely than all the bombs that have fallen on the English cities.

ONCE AGAIN they have found how a people can save themselves by their exertions, the world by their example. Five months ago the British stood alone, and by all ordinary estimates, defenseless. Five months ago it appeared that all Europe would be united against them and a world-wide alliance as well. Today they are not defenseless, and Europe is not united against them, and the world-wide alliance is shaken, and from every corner of Europe comes evidences that they have allies, and from all parts of the world come assurances that they will not be allowed to fail.

This they have accomplished by their courage, and mankind owes them an infinite debt, not only for holding the line so gallantly but even more for giving back to men their lost faith in themselves.

FOR THE BRITISH have proved to this smart and unbelieving, this clever and neurotic generation, that in the calculation of chances sheer valor is a force, and that with a stout heart and a clear eye men can still assuredly say "out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety."

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Big City Ballad

Oh, I cum to see Manhattan,
And them subways was my goal;
That was thirty years ago today—
And I still am in a hole.

It's a great big busy city
Whar I jump and run and hop,
And I have to keep on rushin'
Cuz there ain't no time to stop.

They handed me a shovel
When I got off a freight,
And I've been diggin' ever since,
For progress cannot wait.

I'd dig across the city
And then right back I'd go,
And dig in all directions—
Cuz a city has to grow.

My Jennie was a blue brunette;
I called her Jennie-Mae;
We lived beside the "L" until
One night it moved away.

I'd dig across the city
night,
A gang of rough, hard boys,
And Jennie had a breakdown
On account of lack of noise.

I was born in Oklahomy,
But I hitch-hiked to New York.
Whar the folks all live on frankfurts
And most always point with forks.

Then I met a certain lady
In the subway in the rain,
And I married her and never Gave a gal a seat again.

We lived happy in a penthouse
Seven miles up in the air;
And we found it pretty pleasant,
Cuz the owner wasn't there.

We have seven sons, all purty.
Each one wore a funny hat,
But they joined a Shubert chorus
And it cured us of THAT.

I've a bungalow in Brooklyn,
I've a job up in the Bronx;
And my wife has had a baby
North of Harlem's honky-tonks.

We will raise that kid in Yorkville
On cow's milk from Staten Isle,
And we'll get divorced in Flushing,
For we got to keep in style.

You ought to know my Hattie—
I call her "Hat" for short—
I have to see her daytimes,
Cuz she spends each night in court.

She's pretty tough, is Hattie;
That girl has been aroun';
When men give her a subway seat
She smacks the sissies down!

Continue, Mr. Kennedy

By Mark Sullivan

America's Due

MR. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY has been our Ambassador to Britain for three years. He has had complete opportunity to do what an Ambassador is supposed to do—acquire knowledge about a foreign country for the benefit of his own. For the past six weeks he has been back in America; he has now resigned.

During his recent six weeks in America Mr. Kennedy has talked—on some occasions in public, many times privately. With a forthright, candid mind, he is in conversation frank to a degree that sometimes may be imprudent. But imprudent only in the sense of giving rise to possible embarrassment—decidedly not imprudent in the sense of loose talk. Mr. Kennedy has a first-class mind—a compound of skill and diligence with statistics, logic in deduction from figures and facts, and a quick, Celtic insight and perceptiveness of atmosphere. The sum of his qualities has made him extremely successful in private business, and given him a highly creditable career in several exacting public offices. He is well equipped to report to America, and provide America with sound judgment, in a field of the most vital national interest.

SOME of Mr. Kennedy's private conversations have been widely repeated by word of mouth, and alluded to in newspapers, to such a degree that they are semi-public, at least in some circles of Washington and New York. On one occasion, a talk he had with a newspaperman was printed. Mr. Kennedy disavowed it, not very vehemently—he said it gave a wrong impression.

The net of the impression Mr. Kennedy has made is that he believes that "democracy is finished in England," that after the war England is going to have what Mr. Kennedy is said to have called national socialism. (The quoted words are from the disavowed interview; but, allowing for variations of terminology, these statements coincide with the vague impression Mr. Kennedy has made in private conversations.)

The view attributed to Mr. Kennedy is, of course, an expression of judgment on his part—judgment about the future, a field in which anyone is free to guess. But it is pertinent to observe that Mr. Kennedy's judgment seems borne out by a British official of the highest rank, Labor Minister Ernest Bevin, described as second to Winston Churchill in power, and likely to succeed to the prime ministry if anything should happen to Mr. Churchill. Mr. Bevin is quoted in newspapers as having said that after the war there must be "economic reconstruction of the whole foundation of society. . . . The task of rebuilding the world has to be done by the working class."

THOSE WORDS attributed to Mr. Bevin are the phraseology of socialism. Indeed, it is difficult to find any distinction between Mr. Bevin's phrases and those which Soviet Russia uses to describe itself.

Mr. Kennedy has said either too much or too little. Having said what he has, he owes it to America to say more. If it is his convinced judgment that England is going to be a socialist country, he should let America know, and give the facts and reasons for his judgment. It is of high importance to everybody in America.

The importance is not immediate. Even if Mr. Kennedy told us with the greatest positiveness, and even if we took his judgment as our guide, it would lead to no change in our present policy and practice. We would go on with our defense program, regardless of what kind of country England is going to be after the war. We would go on with the help we are giving Britain, for that is part of our defense program. We are giving this help to Britain in our own interest. We do it in order to keep the war from our own shores while we build up our own defense. We will continue to do it, and increase it, to the limit of our capacity consistent with our own needs. We have done but a fraction of what we must do, in self-interest.

BUT THERE may be a stage ahead in which Mr. Kennedy's judgment would be decisive to us. There are some Americans, increasingly vocal, who say we ought actually enter the war on the side of England. When and if we make that decision, we will be likely to take into account any surmised possibility that England is to be a socialist country. To unite in arms with Britain for preservation of a historic conception of society and government which the two nations share, would be one thing. To unite with Britain as a socialist country might also seem to us expedient—but at the same time might not. In any event, we ought to be clear what we are doing.

Clearness is what we need. Twenty-three years ago we entered a war on the theory we were making the world safe for democracy. We suffered tragic disillusion and democracy was not saved. The way to avoid the pain of disillusion is to avoid the error of illusion.

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY

"Having said what he has," Mr. Sullivan believes, "he owes it to America to say more"

Books And Things

Essential Meaning Of War

WHEN BOYD COBHAN told his friend Martin Glendower that he had joined the Confederate Army, Martin, who lived in the hills of Virginia with his young wife, Lindsey, replied: "I don't see how I could go off to a war. I just haven't got a fighting feeling." He and Lindsey were happy. They were thinking of buying another pair of oxen, a mare for Lindsey, piping water into the house, flooring the cabin. They had it all planned, and a war over slaves meant nothing to them.

How wrong they were makes the story of "Beckoning Ridge" (Holt, $2.50), by Emerson Waldman. It's a tale well told, with implications that reach beyond the Civil War period in which it is laid. Caught in the terrain that was scoured by two armies and by civilian vandals native to the community, Martin discovered that isolation and detachment were empty dreams. A peaceful man, he learned how to fight, to plunder, to kill, so that he and his kin might survive. And all through the four years of suffering and bitter hardship never once were his loyalties involved; never once did he feel that one army was fighting on the side of right and the other on the wrong. When the occasion arose he took part in a murderous raid against the Shadwells, a villainous tribe who, under cover of the war, robbed their neighbors; similarly, under pressure of cold and hunger, he and his wife attacked groups of soldiers accompanying food trains, not pausing to find out and not caring whether they were members of the Union or the Confederate Army.

WITH CONVINCING effect Waldman depicts the life of this young mountaineer, a simple man concerned with simple things. When the home of his friend, Parson Miller, was burned to the ground, he and Lindsey took in the Millers. Later they gave shelter to the girl Champe, whose parents had been killed in a raid; to the wounded Union soldier, Jaspe Fitch, who had been a school teacher up north; to Crozet, the woodsman who, like Martin, could see no right and wrong in the conflict; to Lindsey's brother, Gilbert, whose wife had been burned to death when his house was fired. Martin thought they would be safe in their home on Beckoning Ridge, but Capt. Lafferty, of the Confederate Army, spotted the house while on a raiding trip and when he departed nothing was left but a mass of burning cinders. Homeless on their mountaintop, the group took refuge in a cabin in Glory Hollow which Martin and Lindsey had prepared for such a contingency.

In his description of the precarious life of these people, Waldman succeeds admirably in giving the scenes and action a contemporary touch. He makes it clear that the life of refugees is the same whatever the cause, whatever the year. This means they eat, they sleep, they fall in love, they quarrel. Within the cabin there is conflict over the girl Champe, and it comes to a cruel climax. Outside, the men are concerned with the conflict of survival. Whatever their feeling about taking life, about robbing men, they are driven to both deeds. That they pay deeply for their acts is in the picture. In one raid a member of the group freezes to death while being carried on the shoulders of another; in a second, Martin, desperate for a horse and for food, kills a soldier in ambush and finds out later it is his friend, Boyd Cobham.

The impact of this novel lies in its development of character under the pressure of warfare. There is no person in the book who at some time does not have to turn his hand to a brutal deed. Even the gentle Lindsey goes out with an ax to cut off the frozen legs of a dead soldier in order to salvage the boots he wears. There is little mention of actual battle in this novel, no introduction of historic figures, but the essential meaning of warfare is here, vivid and personal.

"ROAD TO ENDOR," by Esther Barstow Hammond (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.75), is a period novel, but unlike "Beckoning Ridge" its principal character is very much part of the historical scene. Essentially it is the story of Samuel Parris, minister of Salem Village, between the years 1689 and 1692, when the witchcraft furor came to its fearful climax of trials and torture.

Miss Hammond, who obviously has done a vast amount of research in assembling her material, goes back for the setting of her story to the London of 1653, when Sam Parris was born. In tracing the years of his childhood and youth she presents the changing scene in England and introduces a number of characters familiar to the pages of history. There are interesting glimpses of King Charles and Nell Gwyn; there are longer pauses with Charles Morton, of Newington Green, who later came to Harvard College as its president, and of Andrew Marvell, preacher and poet. And, as part of the running background, there are excellent scenes of London's famous fire and of the plague which decimated its population.

Witchcraft is the main theme of the story, and it runs like a thread of fire throughout the life of Sam Parris. As a child he was disturbed by the tales of witches told him by the servants and humble folk near his home. Later, at Newington Green, as a student educated to the ministry, he participated in a pagan May Day festival against the rules of the Puritan institution. The death of his father in Barbadoes made him heir to a sugar plantation while he was studying at Harvard. He went to Barbadoes a young man saddened by an unhappy love. There, sensitive to emotional influences, he was disturbed and tortured by the atmosphere of voodooism that pervaded the place and, under a spell, succumbed to temptation, committing a sin which followed him to New England and shadowed all the days of his life.

Miss Hammond's story reaches its climax in the trials for witchcraft, which involve members of Parris' own household. She paints an excellent canvas of a period and sets against it the portrait of a righteous man torn between convictions and doubts.

Brave Pen-Wielders

ALL TRUE LOVERS of that beautiful Fascist culture would take esthetic pleasure, I am sure, in the perusal of a file of mail such as invariably follows any reference in print to the peculiar military triumphs of Benito Mussolini's dauntless invincibles. Of course, we vulgar parvenus of the coarse and raucous American breed can hardly expect to appreciate fully the loveliness of thought which flows so sweetly from the pens of the Duce's loyal subjects in our midst, but even we can sense the finer beauty which we cannot fully understand. After all, dull as Americans are, we sometimes are heard to exclaim that an uncommonly colorful sunset is real pretty or swell or cute. Thus, although the deeper pools of the Fascist nature defeat our understanding, even we catch a charming spiritual glimpse from a communication such as, for example, this:

"You filthy, cowardly, yellow cur:

"I hope you will be murdered some day by one of your dirty American swine. You are as looney as a cockroach, and you stink up the house. I hope you will die in agony and that God may curse you and your dirty wife, and if you are not too degenerate to have brats, may they be cursed, too."

THIS INVINCIBLE lives in Richmond, Va., but though he reveals the true spirit of the Duce's indomitables, I have to say, in careful justice to Mussolini's culture, that the writer does not possess the gift of beauty which is found in the spontaneous expressions of some others. It will be noted that he allows himself only one mention of degeneracy, and that a rather glancing allusion, whereas more artistic flowers on the stalk of Fascist culture delight to wallow in a topic that seems to be an obsession. They rub it in their hair.

Americans, having no appreciation of this sort of thing, doubtless would be bored by samples, so I refrain from casting pearls before those whom our Richmond Fascist friend calls swine.

It seems that nothing stirs the cultural being of the Fascist in our contemptible land as deeply as reminders of the military feats of the little nation which takes orders from Hitler, transmitted through Sergt. Mussolini. So sensitive are they that, whereas peoples of less noble nations take pride in telling off the names of famous battlers, in Italy, under Mussolini, Caporetto, Adowa, Guadalajara and now Albania are, like the name of the Deity, forbidden to the tongue. And, of course, the mere mention of these historic scenes by a foreigner is profanation deserving, as our Richmond friend suggests, the death penalty by cruel and unusual means.

ALBANIA DID NOT become a hallowed battle name until the despicable Greeks, ill-armed and few in number, started chasing the Duce's imperial legions back over the mountains and crying, "on to Rome." While the Italian army was advancing, while the indomitables were ganging up on the unarmed, unmilitary side-hill dodgers of the Albanian country it was not merely legal but quite the thing to speak of Albania in public. But after the fight went into the characteristic military direction of the indomitables, which is to say reverse, the name became sacred, along with the other symbols of Fascist glory.

"You, you despicable liar," says a quiet note which breathes of beauty, "may you rot and choke on your own cowardly lies, you louse. An Italian woman who spits in your face."

Again you feel, if you are not too dense, the culture of Fascist Italy, and here, in slightly different form but in the same, unmistakable spirit, we have another expression:

"Your insulting, malicious and hateful editorials have definitely touched us. The person who drew this card (an ace of spades, inclosed) is under oath to touch you by the best and only method for a rat like yourself. A .38-caliber bullet through your lungs, in the most silent manner. You have been altogether too unfriendly. Too bad, but it must be done."

This was signed "The Committee."

We are a young, raw people, we Americans, who cannot understand the culture of the Duce, but such chance manifestations make us aware that we are missing something wonderful, one way or another.

Pros And Cons Of Britain's Need

REPEAL of the Johnson Act will not solve the problem of financing the British war effort when Britain's cash reserves run out. The Johnson Act merely forbids the British to seek private credits in this country, and these they cannot conceivably obtain in any case. Revision of the Neutrality Act, to permit loans to belligerents by Government corporations, is the minimum action really required to make fresh American dollars available to Britain.

The Administration is far from eager to move in the matter now. Possibly the attitude will change when the full facts of Britain's situation are placed before Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., by an emissary of the British treasury soon to arrive in Washington. For the present, however, high Administration officials bristle with arguments, all tending to show that the British do not need money at present, and will not need it for some time to come.

Thus there is not a shred of substance to the common assumption that the President, the State Department and the Treasury are all busily conspiring to get her to expunge the Johnson Act from the statute books. If they were, indeed, the problem of financing Britain's war effort would be far less puzzling. For instead of an easily understandable executive conspiracy to give Britain more aid, the problem turns on a complex controversy over the secret British war balance sheets.

AMBASSADOR Joseph P. Kennedy, peddling appeasement across the country, is using the argument that "Britain is busted" as one of the punch lines in his sales talk. It may seem a little odd, therefore, that Kennedy's opponents in the Administration, the real zealots, advocates of all aid to Britain short of war, should now contend that financial aid is one kind we need not give. Yet this is the contention. In support of it, three main points are made:

(1) That the British gold reserves can stand further withdrawals; (2) that the British have yet to mobilize all the American securities, dollar balances and gold reserves of their Allies, such as the Dutch government in exile, and their dominions, such as Canada; and (3) that the British can still get money by liquidating their so-called direct investments, such as Lord Astor's New York real estate, the American subsidiaries of firms like the big rayon makers, Courtauld's, and the American branches of companies like Sun Insurance.

IN ANSWERING these points, the emissary of the British Treasury will not lack for points of his own. No one knows how far the British gold reserves have been lowered by calls from outside the United States and reasonable reserves are obviously necessary to back the British currency and to provide the British treasury with emergency funds for the world money markets. Total mobilization of the assets of Britain's allies and dominions is a task that presents tremendous difficulties, both economic and political. Finally, liquidating direct investments is far less easy than selling British-owned American securities on the stock exchange.

Compromise should not be difficult on points one and two. Point three is the sore one, partly because all the bad feeling accidentally aroused in the credit controversy has somehow concentrated here, and partly because the Treasury has a burning conviction that liquidation of direct investments has been avoided to spare the feelings of "the Birmingham crowd," or British big business. The British negotiator has one conspicuous out, however. During the inter-Treasury discussions of wartime fiscal relationships in the spring of 1939, the British asked for and received assurance that this Government had power to form a corporation to purchase or lend money against assets of this type. It will be hard to answer him, if he simply tells his American hosts, "Well, we regard these assets as frozen and don't know how to unfreeze them. But if you think you have the secret, we'd be glad to hand them over to you at their fair values."

IF THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR, Lord Lothian, correctly represents his government—and it is unimaginable that he does not—the British say they will soon require cash to meet payments in this country. If they are right, the cash will have to be found, unless the United States prefers to see Britain go under for want of supplies.

So much is clear. Meanwhile, another body of opinion is also forming in the Administration. Those who share it feel the Treasury approach to the credit problem is unbelievably niggling. They point out that, after all Britain is fighting our battle, and that we should not tear the last pound of flesh from British ribs before agreeing to draw on our own resources. Above all, they recall that the world struggle is a struggle between liberal democracy and Nazi tyranny. And they predict there is no surer way of procuring an eventual victory for tyranny than by gathering to ourselves the assets of all the rest of the world, and preparing such postwar economic chaos as will inevitably produce the gravest social consequences. Their reasoning is at least worth careful consideration.

$1,600 Sought For Capital's Yuletime Tree

Plans for the annual National Community Christmas Tree celebration on the Ellipse were launched yesterday at a meeting of the national and local committees in the Harrington Hotel.

An estimated $1,800 must be raised to finance the project, it was announced. Ways and means of obtaining the necessary funds will be discussed this week with Commissioner J. Russell Young, national chairman of the program.

Miss Sibyl Baker, playground head, was named chairman of the local executive committee. She will be aided by Ovid Butler, executive secretary of the American Forestry Association as vice chairman, and F. F. Gillen, acting superintendent of National Capital Parks.

Newton B. Drury, director of the National Capital Parks, was appointed vice chairman of the national committee.

Tentative plans call for music by the Marine Band and choral singing by the George Washington University Glee Club. The ceremonies will begin at 5 p. m. Christmas Eve and President Roosevelt will again be invited to officiate at the tree lighting.

Donald Nelsons Feted By Mrs. Irene Caldwell

Defense Commissioner and Wife Break Rule Against Social Functions Dinner Party in Their Honor

By Hope Ridings Miller

DEFENSE COMMISSIONER Donald Nelson has not chosen to take a prominent role in the Capital's partying picture during the few months he has been here. Occupied with his duties, which have sent him out of town much of the time, he has put in infrequent appearances at Capital social functions. In other words, he has consistently declined to be feted, or to attend fetes for others; but last night he broke his rule, and he and Mrs. Nelson were honor guests at a large dinner given by Mrs. Irene Caldwell at her home on Forty-fourth Place.

Hope Ridings Miller

Informality was the keynote of the party, which began at 7:30 o'clock and was still going strong several hours later. Receiving at the door of the drawing room, Mrs. Caldwell wore a frock of grey-green crepe, cut on simple lines. Mrs. Nelson, who makes fashion news every time she steps out, had on a Schiaparelli frock of black velvet, accented with a square-cut neckline edged in brilliants, and large cone-shaped pockets to match.

Assisting the hostess was her pretty subdeb daughter, Barbara, who attends the Madeira School and was taking a few hours out from her studies to enjoy the party.

Autumn bouquets, featuring roses and chrysanthemums in pale yellow shades decorated the living room and dining room, where guests were seated at small tables.

In addition to Mr. Nelson, several other important "names" associated with the Defense Commission were on hand for the party, including Chester Davis, who was accompanied by Mrs. Davis, and J. Clyde Nichols.

Among others I saw there were Justice and Mrs. Justin Miller, the latter of whom has been working on another novel the past few months; Mrs. Thurman Arnold, who came without her Assistant Attorney General husband—he's out of town on business—Dr. and Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, the Export-Import Bank president and Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, Richmond Keech, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Foote, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Henning, Col. and Mrs. O. R. McQuire, Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn Waltman, Mr. and Mrs. John O'Donnell, Mrs. Ambrose Diehl, of San Francisco, who is spending some time here at the Mayflower, and several others.

EARLIER, I dropped by to meet Ethel Barrymore Colt at a small tea given by Mrs. Thomas Richard Cowell at her home on Tracy Place. As you probably know by now, Miss Colt is here to appear in "D. C. Melody," the Washington Theater's production scheduled for December 8. And after six straight hours' rehearsal she came on to the party, ready to answer any questions that came her way.

She thinks Washington needs and deserves an authentic nationally endowed theater; and she has been interested in such a project ever since Hallie Flanagan came here as the head of the Federal Theater under the WPA. She understands why that venture failed ("Under the present set-up, it seems there's no way for art to flourish under Government auspices; and after all, the Communist influence in the Federal Theater was enough to merit its being killed," she said.) But she thinks a first-rate Washington theater is already on the way to being established and she's more than thrilled at having a role in the opus.

I understand, incidentally, that seats for the opening of "D. C. Melody" are almost sold out, and that the audience is slated to be full of social notables.

Following the opening Mrs. Cowell will entertain at a party for Mrs. Harold Sims, who is coming to town on Thursday to spend several days, and probably will go on from here to Nassau for an extended visit. You'll remember that when the Duke and Duchess of Windsor were planning their trip to this country some time ago, Mrs. Sims had arranged a party for them. Perhaps, they'll fete her while she is in Nassau.

SPEAKING OF THE theater, as I was a few lines back—rumors were rippling up one aisle and down the other at the National Theater last night that Mrs. Altemus ("Liz") Whitney was in the audience. Not so long ago rumors were making the rounds that a romance was brewing between her and Bruce Cabot, who has the lead in the current play, "Off the Record." More recently, we've been hearing that the whole thing had cooled to a minus quantity—the romance, I mean; but anyway "Liz" was there last night, wearing a red street-length frock with a mink coat and a broad-brimmed black hat. Furthermore, she went backstage later. So draw your own conclusions.

Among others I saw in the audience were Mrs. Stanley Reed, Sita Finkenstaedt, accompanied by Sidney Kent; Mrs. Randall Hagner and Mrs. Sidney Lee, Clarence Hewes and his pretty niece, Ellen Flowerree, Lady Lewis, Miss Nancy Hoskinson and Julia Cahill in a party, and many regular first-nighters.

A LUNCHEON yesterday at Pierre's wound up the eight-week course of the public-speaking class of the Washington Junior League. Members, talking on subjects ranging all the way from grandmothers to aviators, proved that Demosthenes had nothing on them. Mrs. Thomas A. Knowles was awarded a prize for "showing the most improvement," and honors of being the best speakers in the group were shared by Mrs. W. Calhoun Stirling and Mrs. Truman Smith. Mrs. L. Metcalfe Walling, chairman of the education committee, which sponsored the course, presided at the luncheon and introduced the speakers.

SOCIAL SALMAGUNDI: Somerset Maughan, noted British novelist, was a luncheon guest yesterday at the British Embassy. Mme. Lombard, wife of the former Military Attache of the French Embassy, is writing a series of articles for a New York newspaper . . . When a big-league party goes on the boards, you can see just about every shade and degree of political opinion reflected in the teacups. For example, at a teatime fete on Sunday, the first arrival was Representative Hamilton Fish. Just as he went down the receiving line, John L. Lewis appeared in the door, and just as he was being greeted, Mrs. Cordell Hull arrived. Leaving the same party arm and arm a few minutes later were Mr. Fish and Paul V. McNutt.

Crown Princess Feted

Crown Princess Martha of Norway was the guest of honor at a dinner given last night by the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz.

MRS. HARRISON C. STANTON

has issued cards for a large tea on Saturday at her home, 1706 Twenty-first street, from 4 to 7 o'clock. Assisting her will be Mrs. John Biddle, Mrs. Elvin R. Heiberg, Mrs. Melville D. Church, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, Mrs. Leslie Glenn, Mrs. Ord Preston, Mrs. Robert O. Lord, Miss Alys Downing, Miss Carolyn Nash, Miss Sallie Ovenshine and Miss Anne Lomax. Mrs. Stanton is remembered here as Miss Laura C. Wells, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wells, and before her marriage to the late Mr. Stanton, she was Mrs. Julian Willcox. She has spent much time in recent years at her home in Stockbridge, Mass.

About the Town

with Dudley Harmon

IT SEEMS incredible, but in a few more weeks Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss will be without a roof over their heads (at least an East Coast roof). They have already given their last dinner party at Dumbarton Oaks, and are busy packing up their personal belongings. Mrs. Bliss is out of town this week and both will leave the first of the year for their home in Santa Barbara.

DUDLEY HARMON

The Blisses have not yet announced where they'll live when they come back in the spring, but it's said they may build a house on land adjoining the property they have given to the city. Now their guest at Dumbarton Oaks is John Thacher, assistant director of the Fogg Museum in Cambirdge, Mass. Mr. Thacher is here to attend to certain administrative details in turning the house and the museum of Byzantine art over to Harvard University.

* * * *

WHILE DETAILS of the future of the beautiful Bliss home are shrouded in secrecy, it is reported that selected art students from Harvard will live there. Mr. Thacher is already being besieged by friends of Mr. and Mrs. Bliss who want to know what Harvard is going to do about the famous Bliss swimming pool. This is a mecca in summertime for officials and diplomats who are kept in the Capital, and they hope they have not seen the last of it.

THE Canadian Minister, stricken with a heart attack the other day is, it's nice to report, much, much better. He is reported to have sat up recently and asked for a shave! The Minister was taken to a New York hospital from the Ritz Carlton, where he was honeymooning with the former Marian Trumbull.

WITH SO MANY worthy benefits for the unfortunate Europeans holding the spotlight, it may surprise you to learn that there are 600 stranded and almost starving Americans in Paris. Mrs. Henry Downe, who lived there for 25 years, and is president of the American Aid Society of France, has their cause very much at heart. She says they have no means of paying for their transportation back. Now in Washington to visit Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, Mrs. Downe says she is going to try and get those Americans home.

BY FAR the most inconspicuous guest at the Garrett dance on Saturday was Elsa Maxwell. The famous party thrower just sat quietly most of the evening and left early.

ODDS AND ENDS: Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill will give a dance on New Year's night . . . Mrs. McCook Knox had with her over the week-end her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Smith, of New York. Mr. Smith is still working on his novel, the synopsis of which won a prize offered by a publishing firm. They hope to return to Washington for New Year's . . . Maj. Henry Leonard, just back from Colorado, will go there again December 15. He is chairman of the State Republican Committee and finds comfort in the fact that Colorado went Republican in the election . . . Mr. and Mrs. George Howe hope to move this week to their new home at 3122 P Street, just a few doors from the house they used to live in . . . Cecelia vom Rath is beginning work as salesgirl in a jewelry shop . . . Robert Buell, of the State Department, has been ordered to Berlin and expects to leave in January . . . George Renshard, with whom he shares a house in Georgetown, must pack up in two weeks for a new post, but doesn't yet know which . . . And have you heard that Dorothy Thompson may be given a Cabinet post?

Prices Receive Congratulations On General's Latest Advance

Phone Calls, Wires, Friends Dropping In Keep Couple Busy as Marine Officer And Wife Get Settled in Their New Home

With friends dropping in all evening long, telegrams arriving by the score and the telephone ringing constantly, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Charles F. B. Price were kept busy yesterday receiving congratulations on Gen. Price's selection as major general of the Marine Corps, which was announced only yesterday.

"From Colonel to Major General in Five Days," or "It Can Happen in the Service," might be the title of this Horatio Alger-like tale, for only five days ago Gen. Price was still a colonel. Then came his promotion to brigadier general, and only yesterday, the additional promotion to major general.

The Prices arrived in Washington about a year and a half ago from Shanghai, China, where Gen. Price had been in command of the Fourth Regiment of Marines. Previous to that he had been on many State Department missions, including one to Nicaragua in 1928.

Guests arriving yesterday fund a serene and cordial hostess in Mrs. Price, in spite of the fact that they have just moved into their new home, 2125 Bancroft place during the past week. For over a year the Prices occupied 2116 Bancroft Place until the house was sold, practically over their heads, necessitating a quick move.

Gen. and Mrs. Price have planned a series of entertainments during the season, including both dinners and cocktail parties. The date of the first one has not yet been announced, but will take place sometime before Christmas, with another one to follow during the holidays, when they expect to have several house guests.

Jesse Joneses Given Dinner By the Davieses

Commerce Secretary And Wife Are Honor Guests at Party

Pink orchids and lilies of the same shade, decorated the table last night when Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Davies entertained at dinner. Guests of honor were the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Jesse Jones.

After dinner guests watched a showing of the movie, "Mayerling to Sarajevo," which stars John Lodge, brother of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge.

Besides Mr. and Mrs. Jones, the guests included the Australian Minister and Mrs. Richard Casey, Associate Justice Frank Murphy, the Counselor of the British Embassy and Mrs. Nevile Butler, Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Atherton, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Clayton, Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock, Mrs. George Holmes, William Averill Harriman and Stewart McDonald.

Aline Wharton Is Engaged

Mrs. George Wilson Wharton announces the engagement of her daughter, Aline, to Rupert Lionel Thewlis Johnson, of England. Mr. Johnson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lionel Johnson, of Abbot's Bay, Keswick, and London.

Miss Wharton's father was the late George Wilson Wharton, for many years a member of the staff of the National Geographic Society.

After graduating from Central High School in 1936, Miss Wharton spent the summer with relatives in England. It was then that she met Mr. Johnson. The following year Mr. Johnson visited the Whartons in the United States. The friendship culminated in their engagement. As Mr. Johnson is now serving in the British army, no date can be set for the wedding.

Miss Wharton went to American University for two years and became a member of Delta Gamma sorority. She completed her college work last June at Bennington College, Bennington, Vt.

Debutantes From Washington and Virginia Attend Bachelors Cotillion at Baltimore

Dozen Dinner Parties Precede Dignified Affair

Washington debs unwrapped their seldom-used long white gloves from the tissue paper last night and put on their best party manners for the dignified Bachelors Cotillion in Baltimore. A traditional event which still maintains an atmosphere of great formality, the party was held as in years past at the Lyric Theater, where a brand new floor was nailed down over the seats.

Along with the white gloves, full skirted dresses and clouds of white tulle struck an ante-bellum note at the party. Parents mingled with their offspring at the affair, and a dozen dinner parties preceded it.

Old Maryland Represented

Among the few Washington debs present who can really say she's from an old Maryland family was Miss Kitty Hill, pretty darkhaired daughter of Mrs. Hiram Bingham, who was the former Suzanne Carroll, and Gen. John Philip Hill. She was escorted by her father, her brother-in-law, Phillip H. Clark, and her cousin, Harper Carroll. Her aunt, Mrs. C. Evans Hill, gave a dinner in her honor beforehand.

Miss Elaine Darlington, whose coming-out dance here Saturday is still the talk of the town, was accompanied to Baltimore by her mother, Mrs. George A. Garrett, and Mr. Garrett. She wore white silk organza over sliver cloth, trimmed with peignoir effect of white horsehair studded with rhinestones, all very effective with her dark hair.

Before the party she was guest of honor at a dinner given by Miss Juliana Clark. Mr. and Mrs. J. Edward Johnston presented her at the ball and she was squired by Wallace Lanahan.

Groups Dine At Belvedere

The big dining room of the Hotel Belvedere was turned over entirely for big dinners given before the ball. The Misses Margaret Cary Tuckerman and Catherine Clement were feted there by Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Van Ness, of Green Spring Valley. Escorting Miss Clement were Carroll Van Ness, jr., and Roger Clapp. She wore a cloth of silver gown with a silver calla lily pattern and carried an old-fashioned nosegay in pastel shades.

Miss Tuckerman, who was escorted by Bruce Cotton and David Porter Van Ness, chose a pale blue frock. Miss Elizabeth Stewart-Richardson was in fragile white tulle, fashioned with an off-the-shoulder neckline and a full skirt appliqued in large velvet pansies in varying shades. With her white camelia bouquet she carried a sprig of white heather (both her parents are of Scottish descent.) Her escorts for the evening were Harry Dorsey Watts and Harry Dorsey Watts, jr.

Blonde Mariana Evans, who got special permission from Simmons College to come home for the ball, entered the theater squired by her father, Joshua Evans, and Robert Parsons. Her white tulle dress was made with a bouffant skirt. Before the ball she was guest of honor at a dinner given by Mr and Mrs. Hewlett Naylor.

Commander and Mrs. Allen Ingram Price attended the dinner which Mr. and Mrs. Lennox Birckhead gave for their daughter, Miss Mary Stuart Montague Price, and the hosts' niece, Miss Mary Buchanan Albert, of Baltimore. Miss Price wore white, made with a velvet bodice, and a bouffant skirt of white silk faille trimmed with rosebuds shading from pink to American beauty. Her escorts were Lennox Birckhead, Ross Pancoast and Dr. Virgil Green Damon.

Miss Marbury Among Guests

Miss Lucy Marbury, debutante daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Marbury, twirled about the floor in a frock of dainty pink, made with a full skirt of tulle and a pink and silver bodice. Her beaux for the evening were Fendall Marbury, a cousin, and Dr. Richard Shackelford.

Miss Anne Shivers, who is spending the season here with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Leetch, wore powder blue with a silver lace bodice and tulle skirt. She attended the Birckhead dinner and Robert Henry Renshaw, jr., was her partner for the ball.

Miss Georgianna Flather, debutante daughter of the William J. Flathers, was feted at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Walker Fairfield Peterson. Her costume of white silk jersey was made on Grecian lines and was trimmed with gold.

Debs Present From Virginia

Mr. and Mrs. James S. Sloan, of Baltimore, gave a pre-cotillion dinner for Miss Patricia McKnew, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald H. McKnew, of Washington. Her escorts were Mr. Sloan, William Seamans and Nicholas Shriber. Miss Courtney Owens, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. S. Logan Owens; Miss Marcia O'Brien, daughter of Col. and Mrs. James A. O'Brien; Miss Lucy Clagett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. B. Clagett, were other belles at the ball.

Miss Phyllis Walker Richardson, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Davison Richardson, of Fairfax, Va., was guest of honor at a supper given before the cotillion by her cousin, Miss Sally McCandlish, with whom she is staying while in Baltimore.

From the Virginia hunt country came two popular debs, the Misses Betty Lyon and Elizabeth Wilbur. The former chose for the ball a frock of sheer white net, with a tight bodice and a narrow ostrich plume trimming the neckline. Miss Wilbur also wore white, her frock of tulle having a tight fitting bodice of sequins and a billowing skirt. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet.

Miss Lyon's mother, Mrs. Moncure Nelson Lyon, and her brother, Moncure, jr., attended the cotillion with her. Miss Wilbur was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Frederick Haserick, and the deb was escorted by Thomas Deford.

Wife Meets and Discovers Kinship of Mind With Woman Whose Husband Dealt Hers Spiteful Injustice; Is a Friendship Feasible?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My problem is not a big emotional one. I am fortunately married to a charming, intelligent, devoted, faithful gentleman. We have had our share of quarrels, some of them very serious, at times. But they have been worked out of our systems, and now, in our fifteenth year of marriage, we are happier than ever before. We are secure in each other's love. Of course, we have yet to face the "dangerous forties," but I am not afraid.

Believing that true happiness depends upon the right solution of little things, as well as big ones, I would appreciate your viewpoint on the following problem: "During the past few months, I have met, and enjoyed a growing friendship with, the wife of a government official in the branch of government with which my husband is connected.

Our spontaneous congeniality had nothing to do with the fact that our husbands work under the same roof. On the contrary! We happen to be interested in the same people and in the same field of endeavor. We see each other at clubs meetings. But we have never visited in each other's homes, although, in the natural course of events, that would be the next thing on the program.

She has invited my husband and me on several occasions to her home and I have declined, pleading previous engagements. But the truth of the matter is this: My husband knows definitely that her husband gave him a very nasty deal, which involved a salary cut of $100 a month. (The injustice was deliberate, and there is a long story back of it, having to do with one of their mutual acquaintances, whom my husband befriended in an hour of need.)

My husband feels very deeply about this "throat-cutting," and absolutely refuses to accept the other man's hospitality. "I am not a hypocrite," my husband says. "I will not shake his hand, sip his liquor and eat his food, when I know he cut my throat." My husband is not vindictive. He doesn't want to cut this man's throat in return, but he certainly doesn't want to pretend to be friends.

I feel very strongly about this, too. Anyone who does my husband a deliberate injustice can never be a friend of mine. But the wife probably knows nothing about this matter. Or, if she does, she probably hasn't the slightest idea how deeply it cut. In our lives, it has made the difference between living comfortably and pinching pennies. And the man stubbornly refuses to reverse his decision, even in the face of recommendations from higher-ups.

The wife, no doubt, is beinning to wonder why I always decline her invitations, and why I never invite her to my home. My husband doesn't try to control my friendships. He understands why she and I would like each other. He simply will not go to their home and, of course, doesn't want to entertain them in our home.

Now, here is my question: Shall I tell her frankly the next time she issues an invitation, that my husband feels her husband did him an injustice and doesn't care to pretend to be friends? Or shall I continue to have "previous engagements?" Sincerely, J. H. L.

Marriage Has Precedence Over Friendship's Claims

DEAR J. H. L.: If the shoe were on the other foot; if the ex-executive or his wife had done you a venomous wrong, after which the other party had begun to "cultivate" your husband—would there be any doubt in your mind as to how he should react, in loyalty to you? Wouldn't you feel that, in giving any encouragement whatsoever to a potential alliance with the traitor's camp, he was "letting you down?"

Wouldn't you feel that, if or as he tolerated the development of any social interchange with that twain, which you could not, in conscience, share, he was being inexplicably false to your indivisibly interlocking interest? I am sure you would. Indeed, I am sure you do feel that way, today. And that is why you have involuntarily resisted the considerable appeal of this woman's congenial mind. Some deep instinct for self-preservation, some presentiment of the all-importance of mutual loyalty in marriage, has prompted you to serve first things first.

In the continuance of that policy of loyalty—which is at once ethically admirable and socially practical—it would be best, I believe, to "let sleeping dogs lie;" best not to "take your hair down," with the man's wife, in an apologetic effort to affirm the essence of friendship with her, while rejecting its attributes. You cannot—as full truth would require—declare her husband's spiteful injustice, without putting her most painfully upon the defensive; thus automatically curdling the tentative harmony that exists. And it would not be enough—it would be unfair, indeed, vaguely disloyal, to your husband—to say to her merely that he "feels her husband did him an injustice."

Moreover, she would be sure to report your remarks to her husband, thus adding fuel to the flame of whatever surly satisfaction he has derived from "knifing" your husband. It would mark the beginning of a second round in this undercover feud; a feud which can best be brought to rest by the type of handling which your eminently civilized husband is giving it.

My advice to you is to let your incipient "friendship" with the executive's lady die, of polite inattention. You can manage her overtures with a suave detachment that graciously leaves her outside your sphere of actively cultivated interests; and gives her to understand, by implication, that social intimacy is not in the cards. You can be "buried in work" at one time; tied up with a "previous engagement" at other times; "not sure, but you think you'll be out of town," a third time, and so on. —until finally she must accept the fact that your pursuits and hers cannot converge. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Gay Wool Print Good Companion For Winter Coat

Hollywood, Calif.—"Under-coat frocks," says Orry-Kelly, Warner Bros. studio designer, "are the type that every girl should be interested in this time of year when coats are more often on than off. A dress should be colorful under a dark winter topper, sleek to eliminate bulkiness under a fur coat, and smartly detailed to show when her coat flies open in the wind.

"Gayly printed woolens are a happy thought with a monotone coat. Our football fans at the studio like the combination of floral woolens under a sports coat, for they're correctly dressed both for the game and for dinner afterward. Rosemary Lane has just such a combination in a print showing small purple flowers on a beige ground and worn under a natural camel hair coat.

"And because fur slips over satin with the greatest of ease the satin suit or dress is momentous.

"Many smart new coats are draped to correspond to the draperies of the under-frock. Bette Davis is wearing one of these in navy wool over navy crepe, both garments with left-sided drapes.

Nature's Scent

The outdoor trend among women has caused great interest in the woodsey perfumes as Christmas gifts. The one here, "Woodhue" (I would, would you) has all the poignancy and color of an autumn landscape. It harmonizes perfectly with country tweeds and open fires

By Carolyn Abbott

In the future the over-worked word glamour will be as obsolete as Chaucer's picturesque language in the "Canterbury Tales. Or else it will have a different meaning from its present connotation.

Indicative of the new emphasis on wholesomeness rather than so called night club glamour are the new perfumes. To be sure the heady, sophisticated odors still predominate but the outdoor, woodsey scents, of which there are an ever increasing number, point to a definite back-to-nature trend. As a double backer of this trend are the specifications of the new beauty queens. These are bright eyes, a glowing, sunkissed complexion, an outdoor perfume odor, and a natural manner.

This year there are more piney, balsam odors in both bath preparations, colognes and perfumes than ever before. Elene of Old Vienna is trebling her piney products this fall. Last summer "Strawhat," an outdoor perfume that captured the scent of new mown hay, fields of clover and wild flowers was introduced. Now the same firm that brought that out is now offering "Woodhue" illustrated here.

Make-up Rules Of Hollywood Are Simple

Hollywood, Calif.—Pere Westmore, authority on feminine pulchritude at Warner Bros., has rules of color in makeup that are very easy to follow:

"Powder and powder base should match the skin or be only a shade lighter.

"Lipstick should have the same basic color as the rouge but can be rosy, bright or dark depending upon one's personal preference and the contour of the lips. Nail lacquer should be selected to match the lip color.

"Only true brunettes should use black mascara or eyebrow pencil. Brown is more natural looking.

Gay Material, Low-Cost Way To Refurbish 'Tired' Rooms

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

WHEN in decorative doubt, figure it out this way. If you don't have much to spend on refurbishing, you'll make more of a splash to put that little on gay yards of figured material, something that will stand out incisively and take a lot of decorative responsibility. If you have a more important sum to invest, consider adding just one fine dominating piece of furniture that will focus attention upon itself and be an enduring satisfying possession.

We have in mind a room that was, quite literally, "made" by a noble breakfront cabinet of mahogany in eighteenth century style. It was the only large wall piece in the room for one thing; for another, it was a natural center of interest since there was no fireplace. Balancing its height, on the opposite side of the room, were draperies of classic lines in a glowing wine color which looked very rich but actually were inexpensive, being made of one of those scintillating new textural fabrics.

Light Blue Walls

The sofa and easy chairs were slip covered in a flowered material —staunch, washable, very practical—a big scale pattern on a light blue ground. The walls were painted in this same light blue, while the rug was a misty two-tone neutral on the beige side. Wine red seats for side chairs and lamp shades of off-white and of this deep red were pleasant accents. The only other wood furniture were the incidental tables.

Yet, there was an equally charming room we know about which was done over on a shoestring. The furniture was old and scuffed and hadn't really amounted to much even when it was new; but it had to be kept on. The rug, a broadloom in a grand shade of green, was the only satisfactory thing in the room. So the refurbishing were planned around it.

Flower Pattern

The walls were painted a pale shade of the same green and the old furniture was painted in dull surface enamel in a soft green just between the color of walls and rug. Then came the flowers by the yard—a cretonne on a pale shade of green with a bold brighter flower pattern that took over the room. Slip covers, double sash curtains on rings and lamp shades were all of this same cheerful fabric. The room had quite an air when it was finished and even the old furniture blended with serenity into the picture, serving useful needs yet not calling attention to itself.

Patriotic Stunts Pep Up Parties For Holidays

THE LATEST—a patriotic party! Have red, white and blue decorations, lively games with a patriotic theme—and your crowd vows you're the cleverest hostess in town.

Playing a "famous American" version of "Who Am I" breaks the ice and gets your party off to a rollicking start. Pin to the back of each guest a card bearing a well-known name, but—watch out—he musn't peek!

Up to everyone to guess his own identity by asking questions. Betsy Ross, asking what she's noted for, is mystified when Patrick Henry tells her "Needlework!" As for poor, distracted Admiral Dewey, his questions about his fame have everyone singing: "I joined the navy to see the world. What did I see? I saw the sea!"

Soon, in the mix-up, everybody knows everybody else and the crowd's hilariously ready for a "Patriotic Balloon Dance." With gay music playing, with red, white or blue balloons tied to the ankles of each dancer, there's sure to be excitement—especially if you tell the gang you'll give prizes to any who have their balloons intact when the music's over.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

'When Ladies Meet'

The little woman in the corner who, in a group of her kind, never gets any further with a sentence than "Say, listen——" has found a champion in Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey.

Mrs. DeGoofey

The indomitable president of the Do Something About It League announced at her press conference yesterday that she was starting a referee system for conversation at hen parties.

"The ladies luncheon needs overhauling!" declared the famous reformer. "I have attended several lately and even I—who am not exactly a shrinking violet—had a hard time holding my own in them. Now the Mrs. Genteels and the Mrs. Milquetoasts at these events are simply shouted down completely. And a woman who doesn't talk as fast as a machine gun has no chance of ever finishing a sentence.

"Moreover, when a guest with a big voice and a corresponding ego happens to get on a tiresome subject, the party becomes merely a squirming contest. What is even worse, the guests frequently talk at the same time, and the result is similar to loud speaker static at its worst."

Megaphones for The Genteel

"What are your plans for meeting this national crisis, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked an editorial writer.

"First, I propose to limit the attendance at these events to eight, or at most, ten. No civilized social gathering should ever exceed this number. Then, in order that all contestants may be fairly matched, I am providing small pocket megaphones for the inexperienced and better bred guests. It will be the duty of each hostess to check the voices of her guests as they arrive and supply the necessary megaphones.

"However, my most important innovation will be a conversation referee—a woman, or even a man, technically trained in football or other sports, to act as arbiter of talk. This referee will see that every guest gets a chance to talk, and finish sentences. But most important, he—or, perhaps, she—will keep the talk from veering in dull direction."

Stop-Sign for The Long-Winded

Here Mrs. DeGoofey produced from her desk a small electric traffic device with a red and green light and miniature bells.

"This will be placed in the center of the luncheon table," she said, "and operated by the talk referee. For instance, suppose someone begins, 'Oh, that reminds me of what happened to a little friend of mine——' The bell will ring instantly and the red light will flash.

"Now I am busy compiling a list of feminine conversational openings scheduled for the red light. Here are some of them:

"'You know what they found when they operated——'

"'Now I can't tell this just the way I heard it——'

"'Have you heard the new one they're telling about the Roosevelts——'

"'Now back home we always——'

"'You know what the women of this country ought to do——'

"'Did you read what H. G. Wells said——'

"'Let me tell you a story about that——'

"'Now my family came over——'

Green Light for Snappy Subjects

"These are just a beginning," continued Mrs. DeGoofey. "I am asking the public to submit other suggestions for the red light."

"Won't the green light ever operate?" asked a safety first editor.

"Yes indeed. Here are some of the conversational beginnings that will bring it on in a big way:

"'Now I wouldn't want this to go any further——'

"'Well, of course, she's always been one of my best friends——'

"'Oh, say, I know a little woman who makes hats——'

"'Now I'm certainly not a prude, but there are just some things——'

"'Now this is off the record——'

"'You know how she keeps her figure——'

"'I really hate to be a cat——'

"'The thing they do that drives me the craziest——'

"And, finally," continued Mrs. DeGoofey, drawing out a small police siren, "we have this, for the green light, for the woman who breaks in with, 'You know what they really like, women——'"

Exercise for Your Nerves

Hollywood, Calif.—Rita Hayworth follows a program of fluttering little exercises all through the day. Between takes on the set of "Strawberry Blonde" she often stands with hands clasped high over head, swaying gently to right and left, backward and forward. This keeps nerves from knotting up. An informal exercise of flinging arms out to sides and back to chest is good for the upper torso, and swinging them to the floor keeps hips and waist as they should be.

'Y' Women Map Plans For 1942

Site of Convention Is Up for Discussion Before Executive Committee Session

By Jessie Ash Arndt

The Post Club Editor

The problem of where to meet in 1942, when the quadrennial conclave of the world's Y. W. C. A. is scheduled, is one of the problems being discussed at the meeting of the executive committee of the organization now in session here. Headed by Miss Ruth House, of England, who has been in this country for several months, the committee members are holding their first session in Washington at the office recently established in the N. E. A. Building, 1201 Sixteenth Street.

The convention in 1938 was at Muskoka, Canada, and that in 1942 is slated to be held somewhere along the Pacific. Where will depend on the turn of world events which, for the present, have put obstacles in the way of the activities of the World's Y. W. C. A. as well as those of all other organizations established to promote peace and goodwill.

Yesterday, following the morning and early afternoon business sessions of the committee, Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, an honorary member of the national board of the Y. W. C. A. of this country, opened her home at 2001 Twenty-fourth Street Northwest for a tea given by the executive committee for representatives of other organizations.

Receiving with Miss Rouse and Mrs. Parker were Miss Elsa Peterson, president of the local Y. W. C. A.; Miss Marianne Mills, secretary of the World Y. W. C. A. office in Washington; Mrs. Harris R. Chamberlin, vice president for the United States, and Miss Julia Matouskova, vice president for Central Europe.

The tea table was appointed with a center bouquet of roses and lighted with dark green candles. Alternating at pouring were Mrs. James S. Cushman, Mrs. John French, former national president, and Miss Margaret Forsythe, all of New York; Miss Emma Kaufman and Miss Greta Finney, of Canada, and Miss Elizabeth Eastman, of this city.

Today Mrs. William S. Culbertson, former chairman of the World Fellowship Committee of the local Y. W. C. A., will entertain at luncheon for the officers here for the world's "Y. W." meeting.

Among the more than 100 guests at the tea yesterday were Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Gwladys Jones, executive secretary of Quota International; Mrs. Frederich Scott, of Richmond, a member of the national board; Dr. W. L. Darby, of the Washington Federation of Churches, and Mrs. Alfred H. Lawson, Mrs. Julia West Hamilton, president of the Phyllis Wheatley Y. W. C. A., and Judge James A. Cobb, of its board of advisers; the Rev. D. Paul Moody, liaison official of churches and chaplains; Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, of the Children's Bureau; Miss Edith Macauley, president of the Altrusa Club; Dr. Louise Stanley, of the Pan-Pacific Women's Association; Mrs. Laurence Martin, president of the Twentieth Century Club; Mrs. Whitman Cross, president of the Washington Club; Mrs. Gladys Ball Middlemiss, president of the Women's City Club, and Mrs. Bruce Wallace, of the English Speaking Union.

Mrs. Wilbur Carr, wife of the former United States Minister to Czecho-Slovakia, also was present, as were Mrs. Harper Sibley, who arrived yesterday from Rochester, N. Y., to attend the sessions; Judge Annabel Matthews, former president of the D. C. Women's Bar Association; Miss Edith Macauley, president of the Altrusa Club; Miss Shoshana Garber, of the National Council of Jewish Women; Mrs. Laura Puffer Morgan, who during her eight years in Geneva, was in close touch with the headquarters of the World's Y. W. C. A.; Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, president of the Washington branch of the A. A. U. W.; Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward of the Social Security Board; Miss Edith Tibbitts, of the Gallaudet College Y. W. C. A.; Mrs. Earl Armstrong, chairman of the Camp Fire Girls Guardians' Association; Miss Hilda Smith, of the WPA; Mrs. Montgomery Blair, president of the Junior League, and Sidney Talliaferro, a member of the board of advisers of the local "Y. W."

Woman's Party Conclave Saturday

Names famous in the annals of the National Woman's Party will head the list of those attending the banquet in the Mayflower Hotel on Saturday evening, when that organization meets for its biennial convention.

Among those who will be present are Mrs. Inez Haynes Irwin, of New York; Elsie Hill, of Connecticut; Anita Pollitizer, of New York; Mrs. Florence Bayard Hillies, of Wilmington, Del., and Alma Lutz, author of "Created Equal" and "The Challenging Years," all of whom have carried the torch for the equal rights amendment since its inception in 1923.

Pearl Buck, Nobel prize winner, author and lecturer, will deliver the chief address of the evening. Other speakers scheduled are Senator Guy M. Gillette, of Iowa; Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, Democratic committeewoman from Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Ethel Ernest Murrell, of Florida. Mrs. Harvey Wiley will act as toastmistress.

Costello Unit to Meet

Members of the Vincent Costello Unit of the American Legion Auxiliary will meet tonight at the 614 E Street Y. W. C. A. and will bring donations both for the department's gift shops at the Walter Reed and Mount Alto Hospitals and for the Christmas baskets to be filled by the unit.

Pen Women Plan Puerto Rican Trip

Underwood & Underwood

Mrs. Cajigas is chairman of the Puerto Rican Carnival Congress of the league scheduled for February

"Plans for Puerto Rico" engrossed the interest of members of the national board of the League of American Pen Women at their December meeting yesterday at the Willard Hotel.

Mrs. Tomas Cajigas, chairman of the February conclave to be held there, reported on the progress of reservations.

There will be accommodations for only 250 instead of 375 in the Pen Women's party, and the list is filling up rapidly, she announced. The group from Washington will leave here February 15 and will be joined by Pen Women from other sections of the country.

Among those from here who will make the trip will be Mrs. Cajigas with Dr. Cajigas, a native Porto Rican, and their sons and daughter, Anita; Mrs. Edna Knight Gasch, president of the national league; Mrs. H. Lyle Campbell, president of the Washington branch; Mrs. Lilly Hunt, Mrs. Consuelo Seaone, Mrs. Tilman B. Parks, Mrs. Paul Myron Linebarger, Mrs. Charles E. Fairman and Dr. Fairman, art curator of the Capitol.

Also "Cousin Mary Mason," of N. B. C.; Mrs. Nell V. Smith, Lady Leslie, Mrs. E. Flavelle Koss, Mrs. George Quirk and Mr. Quirk, Mrs. Mario Julia and Dr. Julia, Mrs. Theodore Tiller, Mrs. Mabel Pittle, secretary of the league; Mrs. C. C. Jacoby, Mrs. Robert Bennett, Mrs. A. G. Boas, Mrs. Everett Wilson and Mr. Wilson, Peter Carter, Mrs. Rosamond Gaydash.

Mrs. Grace Dupree Ridings, mother of Hope Ridings Miller, society editor of The Post, State president for Texas, will be among those from other sections, as will Mrs. Francesco F. Miller, of Chicago; Annabelle Ward, of Kentucky; Mrs. John Hamilton, of New York, first vice president, and Mrs. Louise Greene, of Kennebunk, Me., fifth vice president.

League Hears Sen. Burke, New G.O.P. Member

The League of Republican Women yesterday welcomed a new member of the Republican Party and a new member of the league when Senator and Mrs. Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, were guests of honor at its November meeting at the Mayflower Hotel.

Senator Burke addressed the league, reviewing events that led to his decision to leave the Democratic Party and join the Republican as "the only one that has a chance of holding the New Deal in check." The two major factors in his decision were the President's proposal for the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government, and for the reorganization of the Supreme Court, he said.

"There is much talk now of unity," said Senator Burke. "That is all right within a certain field. I agree that we should not be warring among ourselves so as to be easy prey to enemies from without. But, if 'unity' means that the loyal opposition must accept whatever is handed down from above, it is a pernicious doctrine. There has never been a time when it was as important as today that every measure have the careful scrutiny of the press and the public."

Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, president of the league, expressed the hope that Senator Burke would be returned to Congress as a Republican member from Nebraska.

Mrs. Virginia White Speel, Republican National Committeewoman for the District of Columbia, spoke briefly at the end of the meeting paying tribute to Wendell Willkie as "a young Lochinvar who has come out of the West to be a spokesman for the champions of our form of government." She declared that, although the Republican Party was "momentarily cast down" it was "by no means defeated."

The league decided, at its business meeting to continue its headquarters at its clubhouse, 1301 Seventeenth Street.

Fleet Reserve Auxiliary Will Meet December 10

The regular monthly session of Unit No. 4, ladies' auxiliary of the Fleet Reserve Association, will be held Tuesday evening, December 10, at 808 I Street Northwest. A baked bean supper will be served to their members and their families preceeding the meeting.

Mrs. Una Lofgren is chairman of the annual Christmas party sponsored by Branch No. 4 and arranged and presented by Unit No. 4. Gifts and provisions will be sent to needy families and gifts and candy will be given to the children of the members of the branch and the auxiliary.

Latin-American Series Ends

The final lecture of the Latin-American series will be held today at 11 a. m. at the Shoreham Hotel.

D. A. R. Chapter To Hold December Meeting Tonight

The December meeting of the Martha Washington Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution will be held tonight at 8 o'clock in the chapter house.

Entertainment will be provided by the Wakefield Society of the Children of the American Revolution, under the leadership of Mrs. Joseph Douglas Lawrence, with Elizabeth Johnson, junior president, presiding.

The annual Christmas party and silver showed for Tamassee School will be held by the Judge Lynn Chapter, D. A. R. tonight at the home of Mrs. T. Hunton Leith.

The guest speaker will be Mrs. Harry M. Howard, national registrar, C. A. R., who will speak on "Christmases in the White House." Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, state chairman of approved schools will be honor guest.

4th Job Clinic Session Tonight

The fourth meeting of the Women's Job Clinic will be held tonight at George Washington University, room 203, building D, G Street, between Twentieth and Twenty-first Streets, at 7:30 o'clock. This clinic, which is sponsored by the Women's Occupational Council, is for the benefit of business and professional women over 35 who are either unemployed or are seeking to make a vocational change.

The guest speaker will be Mrs. Helen T. Steinbarger, consultant in adult education at the Public Library. She will speak on the possibility of reading as a means of helping the individual to improve her background, to recover from mental inertia and to use her leisure time profitably.

The chairman of the Women's Occupational Council, Dr. Marjorie Shearon, will preside. She will report on the progress of plans to canvass the District for jobs for mature business and professional women. Ten unemployed women have volunteered to make this survey during the current week. They will offer to the businesswomen of this city the services of 60 mature women who are qualified to fill responsible positions.

Among the women who have registered at the Women's Job Clinic are editors and editorial assistants, newspaperwomen, bookkeepers, auditors, office managers, secretaries with specialized experience in advertising, medicine and foreign correspondence, translators of French, German, Italian and Spanish, teachers, tea room hostesses and executive housekeepers.

Dr. Ewerhardt to Speak

Dr. Paul J. Ewerhardt will address the current events group of the Women's City Club this afternoon on "Psychiatry and the Social Order."

Democratic Women Hear Miss Bonney

Therese Bonney, internationally known American journalist-photographer, who wears the insignia of the French Legion of Honor, and witnessed the invasion of Finland by Russia, yesterday exhorted members of the Women's National Democratic Club, at their luncheon meeting, to accept and endure personal sacrifices in the cause of democracy in America.

"The time will soon come, I believe, even, that it is here now," she said, "when we can no longer give lip service to the democratic principles for which our country stands; no longer limit our activity and effectiveness to discussing them at cocktail, lunch and dinner parties. We must have the courage to face ourselves, each other, and admit that we have frequently mistaken license for liberty and that many of us have accepted privileges and forgotten the inherent obligations.

"We must all be willing, especially we women, to give up the 'props' of normal conventional living, not have them pulled out from under us. We must be willing to face and endure sacrifice and sustained effort and do it valiantly."

Miss Bonney, who saw conditions at first hand in Finland, Belgium and France, in the first months of the war, declared that the answer to the question as to what women can do lies in not bein an "anti" but in being definitely and actively "pro"—pro-human, pro-certain principles, pro-American.

"I would like to see us form a volunteer women's organization," she said, "perhaps based on the conscription or draft principle, for certain age groups, inspired by the examples of the Finnish and British women, but tempered to our own needs and temperaments."

The luncheon was presided over by Mrs. Claude Pepper, president of the club, and the speaker was introduced by Mrs. Emmett Gudger, program chairman.

Wellesley Alumnae Will Hear Talk By Mrs. Church

Mrs. Ralph E. Church, wife of the Illinois Representative and national president of the Wellesley Alumnae Association, will address the Washington Wellesley Club tomorrow at 8 p. m., at the home of Mrs. Spencer Gordon, 2305 California Street Northwest. Other members of the national executive board will be guests of honor at the meeting.

Committees working on the club's benefit for war refugees will report on the progress of ticket sales. The play, "Seven Wishes," Maurice Maeterlinck's latest work, will be presented December 27 at the National by the Children's Theater of New York.

Peggy Phelps Becomes Bride In Capital

Wed to Lieut. Gochenour In Memorial Chapel At Walter Reed

White chrysanthemums and evergreens formed the setting for the wedding last evening at 8 of Miss Peggy Phelps, daughter of James Warren Phelps, of Berwyn, Pa., to Lieut. William S. Gochenour, U. S. A., son of Dr. and Mrs. William S. Gochenour, of Indianapolis.

The ceremony took place in the Memorial Chapel, Walter Reed Medical Center, Chaplain Henry R. Westcott officiating. The bride, who is the niece of Dr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Silver, of Washington, was given in marriage by her uncle. She wore a white satin gown she designed herself, with a long train and a full-length tulle veil draped from a tiara of satin and orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white camellias and bouvardia.

Miss Cheryl Kidd, of Mount Clemens, Mich., was maid of honor. Her gown of soldier blue was made of velvet and faille taffeta and with it she wore a matching tiara of shirred velvet and carried pink roses and white daisy chrysanthemums.

Young Betsy Phelps Silver, cousin of the bride, was junior bridesmaid. She was dressed like the maid of honor, in a lighter shade of blue and wore a Juliet cap of flowers. Her bouquet was like Miss Kidd's.

Lieut. Garnet P. Frances was best man, and the ushers were Lieut. Oliver G. Cellini and Lieut. Charles E. Grogan. A reception followed in the Jefferson Room of the Mayflower, which was decorated with palms, white chrysanthemums and carnations. The bride cut her cake in traditional fashion with her husband's saber.

When she left for her honeymoon, Mrs. Gochenour wore a green heather tweed suit with brown accessories. The couple will spend the next three weeks motoring in the South before returning to Selfridge Field, where they will remain until Lieut. Gochenour, who has been ordered to the Philippines, leaves for the islands.

The bride is a descendant of Dr. Launcelot Phelps, one of the few surgeons with Washington's army during the Revolution, and of Capt. Timothy Phelps, who led a company of volunteers in the French and Indian Wars. She is a brother of the late James Warren Phelps, jr., Army aviator who was killed last April when his plane crashed in flight maneuvers.

Group to Meet With Mrs. Grady

With the series of Latin-American lectures, just concluded, one of the outstanding items on Washington's weekly calendar thus far this season, the group which planned and carried out those programs will now turn its attention to a series on the Orient.

Mrs. Henry F. Grady, who has been in the throes of moving from the Highlands to 2139 Wyoming Avenue, hardly has her new apartment in order, but, nevertheless, she will gather there tomorrow a committee to plan the series, which will take place during the Lenten season. Mrs. Gifford Pinchot is to be chairman of the lectures on the Far East.

Mrs. Grady will leave early Thursday for California, where she will attend the Institute of International Relations at Riverside, Calif. Dr. Grady, Assistant Secretary of State, will make the chief address before the institute on December 11.

Before returning to Washington shortly before Christmas, Mrs. Grady will make a series of visits in the West, and en route back to Washington will stop off in Dallas, Tex., to spend a few days with Miss Minnie Mae Fleming.

Laura A. Thorpe To Become Bride Of F. W. Tully, Jr.

Mrs. Walter Thorpe, of Rutland, Vt., has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Laura A. Thorpe, of Boston, formerly of Rutland, to Francis W. Tully, jr., of Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Tully, of Chestnut Hill, Mass., and Warren, N. H.

Miss Thorpe, who is the daughter of the late Rev. Mr. Thorpe, attended the University of Vermont, Burlington, where she was a member of Bluestockings, honorary literary society, and Boston University. She is now associated with the Massachusetts Department of Health.

Miss Thorpe's parents were the founders of the Vermont Camp for Crippled Children at Goshen. The Rev. Mr. Thorpe held pastorates in Wallingford, Brandon and Rutland.

Mr. Tully was graduated from Phillips Academy, Andover, N. H.; Yale University in 1930, where he was a member of the Alpha Sigma Phi, and Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. He is now correspondent in Washington, D. C., for the Yankee Networks News Service. He is a member of the University Clubs of Boston and Washington, the Yale Club of Washington and the National Press Club. After a wedding next summer, the couple will make their home in Washington.

To Meet Society On December 22

Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris have set the date on which they will present to society their daughters, the Misses Marion and Mary Theresa Norris.

The party, a tea, will take place December 22 at the Norris home, 2204 R Street. The Misses Norris will also be feted at a luncheon to be given by Mrs. William B. Shearer and Mrs. A. Coulter Wells on December 27 at the Chevy Chase Club.

By SUZANNNE

DR. CURLEY H. BYRD, president of the University of Maryland, will be host to the members of the Chevy Chase Branch of the League of American Pen Women at luncheon Saturday at Rossbourg Inn on the university campus.

The program following the luncheon will include a talk by Dr. Charles S. Richardson, professor emeritus, on the growth of the University of Maryland, and accounts by Mrs. Jesse W. Nicholson and Mrs. Daisy Breau Calhoun on "What I Did to Become a Member of the Pen Women." There also will be music by Miss Ruth Buchanan.

Mrs. Hester Beall Provenson, president of the branch, assisted by Miss Adelle Stamp, dean of women of the university, will preside.

Among the guests of honor will be Mrs. H. Lyle Campbell, president of the District branch of the league, and Mrs. Florence Kahn, president of the Baltimore Branch.

ENGAGEMENTS ANNOUNCED—Announcement of the engagement and approaching marriage of Louise Fincham, an active member of the M. Eleanor Brackenridge Club, to Jack Dennis was made last week-end at a shower given in her honor by the club members. The party was at the home of Mrs. Frank Mason, 4913 W Street Northwest, with Mrs. Eric Schwartze, president of the club, and Mrs. Charles Saunders as assistant hostesses.

Elizabeth M. Andrews Gives Parents Suggestions on Educating Children

PARENTS of elementary school children should realize that home and classroom aren't the only sources of education, says Elizabeth M. Andrews, administrative principal of Bancroft School. "They can give the child new experiences on a motor trip, for instance. If he's always lived in Washington, he may never have seen a farm or a factory. Take time out to visit some along the route. Show him how things are done, and afterward help him to discuss what he's seen. This cleans up his ideas, besides improving his vocabulary."

ELIZABETH ANDREWS

She also urges parents to become familiar with the various growth levels so they may know what to expect of their children at different ages. "A mother will study a cookbook, but sometimes child psychology is harder going," she points out. In general, however, she finds that modern parents as well as teachers are better versed in psychology and hence able to analyze their youngsters' progress. The school program itself has improved greatly in the last decade, she adds. Classroom technique has been "pepped up;" the emphasis on doing things rather than on storing away abstract facts.

TALE OF THE TIME—A lady sitting near the front of a crowded Trinidad bus the other day sneezed violently and was horrified to see her false teeth skid under the driver's seat. A furtive survey of her fellow-passengers revealed that her mishap had attracted the attention only of a white-haired man with a twinkle in his eye. Without glancing at her, he retrieved the plate, concealed it behind his back and, in a neat hidden-ball play, slipped it to her. When the bus reached her stop, she paused beside him long enough to murmur, "You're a good old sport."

P. S. If she reads this, he'd like her to know that he enjoyed that feat as much as any he's performed in nearly half a century as a dentist.

A member of the United Daughters of the Confederacy succeeded in baffling a Willard Hotel elevator operator after the recent U. D. C. convention's ball. "On what floor is lingerie?" she asked him as they descended from the ballroom. "Ma'am?" he inquired. "Oh, well; I guess you haven't been here long enough to know," she said listlessly, and allowed him to deposit her on the main floor of the hotel.

1940 Entertaining Differs From Gay '90s

IS A REVOLUTION occurring in guest entertaining? Is the entertaining of 1940 as different from that of 1930 as 1930 was from the '90s?

In the opinion of Helen Kroeger Muhs, West Coast home economist, there is just as much difference. "The revolution," Mrs. Muhs says, "is toward freedom and spaciousness. Parlors have given way to living rooms, and backyards have given way to outdoor living rooms. Meals are served in the garden, on the terrace and in the patio, reflecting a new freedom. We have late guest breakfasts, brunches, late evening buffets after the theater, dinner on three separate bridge tables, sit-down buffets, progressive dinners via automobile, picnics in half an hour, bridge breakfasts, silhouette menus for lunch and barbecue fireplaces and outdoor and indoor grills. Entertaining is as versatile as the weather and as unstylized as a snowflake."

Mrs. Muhr, in compiling "Sunset's Host and Hostess Book" (Lane Publishing Co.), has written more than a recipe book. The volume contains plans and order lists for all sorts of al fresco food—football dinners, after-swimming parties, snow party buffets, as well as company and family meals. It is a stimulating book, full of opportunities for fresh, original plans and cookery, and costs but $1.00.

If it is an emergency dinner that must be prepared, Miss Muhs' book will suggest menus to take away that "gone" feeling. Here is one of them:

Dinner Menu

Crab cocktail
Emergency corned beef de luxe
Escalloped corn, Harvard beets,
Carrot salad
Quick chocolate pudding
Cheese and crackers
Coffee

Corned beef de luxe is a delightful main dish, and the meat costs anywhere from 11 to 20 cents for six persons. It is worth trying for family or company.

Emergency Corned Beef De Luxe

Cut one can of ice-cold corned beef into 11 or 12 slices, yielding enough to serve six persons. When you have sliced it, spread slices generously on both sides with prepared mustard. Then dip into 1 slightly beaten egg (to which a spoonful of water has been added), then in cracker crumbs. Be sure slices are well crumbed. Heat generous amount of shortening in a large, heavy frying pan. When it is very hot put in the slices and fry in golden brown on each side. Slices will brown in about 10 minutes. Remove to hot platter. Keep hot in oven until needed. They can stand indefinitely and will be just as delicious as when first made. Serve garnished with slices of orange topped with a bit of jelly or slices of sweet pickle.

Tomato-Clam Broth

A good opener for a holiday or family meal is tomato-clam broth. Mix equal portions of plain tomato juice and clam broth, flavor with a mere dash of grated lemon rind and powdered nutmeg. Sprinkle with finely chopped parsley and a little paprika.

Sealed Orange Juice Retains Vitamin C

Air-Tight Container Preserves Vital Food Values

By Ida Jean Kain

WITH FOOD prices up again, Uncle Sam's nutritionists are kept busy answering the questions of housewives bent on planning the meals that afford the highest protection for the least money. The questions and answers are of such general interest that I have condensed this service of the "Market Basket" to give you the benefit of the same information.

For example, many a housewife wants to know: Is it true that oranges lose their Vitamin C a few minutes after they are cut and squeezed for juice?

The answer is no. Fortunately, orange juice does not lose its Vitamin C for some time after it has been squeezed. But if you intend to keep the juice for any length of time, it should be placed in an air-tight container in the refrigerator. In this way there is very little loss of the Vitamin C until the second day.

Tomatoes Are Richer

Then there is the question: Why is it that tomatoes are always near the top of any list of foods rich in Vitamin C?

Here's the answer: It's because tomatoes are richer in C than most other vegetables. Moreover, the acid in the tomatoes protects the vitamin from destruction in the process of canning. Once a can of tomato juice is opened, however, treat it as you would freshly squeezed orange juice that is prepared in advance. Put it in an airtight container in the icebox.

Another good question is: Do canned vegetables—which are cheaper in the winter—furnish the same protection as fresh vegetables?

Commercially canned vegetables have about the same value as fresh vegetables after they are cooked. But the liquid from the canned vegetables must be used—it can be served with the vegetable, or utilized for soups, or stews or gravies. It is the liquid which contains the minerals and many of the vitamins and if these are thrown out, your family is cheated out of valuable health protection.

To make sure that the menus are high in Vitamin C, some raw vegetables and fruits must be included in the daily menus—the cooked vegetables do not contain this important vitamin in sufficient quantities.

French Fleet May Determine Weygand Policy

African Army Revolt Could Be Crushed By Bombarding Bases

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 2.—The French fleet, which the British navy battered into temporary eclipse at Oran July 4, may now hold the key to Mediterranean problem No. 1—whether Gen. Maxime Weygand may one day swing French North Africa back to the Allied cause.

He is chief of French military and political affairs in Africa.

"Weygand might revolt," explained a spokesman at headquarters of Gen. Charles De Gaulle's "Free French" forces here. "But French warships could bombard Algiers, Oran, Tunis and Moroccan ports, forcing him to submission. So the real power lies with Admiral Darlan (Jean Darlan, French navy minister). We need to be sure the French fleet would not act for Vichy."

Reports reahing London tell of growing pro-British sentiment in those parts of the French Empire which have not captiulated to the "Free French" forces and close attention is being paid to Weygand's tours of Algeria and Morocco.

Gen. Weygand himself has said nothing to encourage British hopes that he may come out as a rebel, and officialdom handles the question with kid gloves, for obvious reasons. The only official utterance came from the war office, which has repeatedly denied that Anthony Eden, the war minister, met Weygand in his recent visit to Egypt and the Middle East.

Gen. Weygand is regarded by some observers here as a man who made a mistake at the time of the French armistice with Germany and now does not know quite how to climb around it.

Would Create Problem in London

They believe it is possible that the general is waiting for the Vichy government to commit itself to some further scheme for 'collaboration" with the Axis powers before he openly repudiates it. In this, these observers point out, Vice Premier Pierre Laval, who has been conducting "collaboration" negotiations with Berlin, may unconsciously be playing Weygand's game.

Gen. Weygand's adherence to the "Free French" cause, however, would creat a delicate problem in London. As a much older man with a name which still carries immense prestige in France, he presumably would expect to lead the movement, causing De Gaulle, who was little known in France before the war, to take a subordinate post in the campaign which he himself created after the armistice.

In fact, De Gaulle has no high opinion of the veteran Weygand's capabilities.

If Weygand brought North Africa to Britain's aid, the whole strategic position in the Mediterranean and the Middle East would be reversed, military spokesmen say.

Weygand would bring to British Middle East Commander Lieut. Gen. Archibald Wavell a well-equipped, partly mechanized army of upward of 500,000 men, composed of native troops, the French Foreign Legion and others.

That army could press down from the heights of Tunis eastward into Italian Libya, catching Marshal Graziani's Italian army in a British-French pincer.

Axis Aware of Danger

Gen. Le Gentilhomme, former Governor of French Somaliland, now with Gen. De Gaulle in London, says he is convinced that the last has not been heard from that colony. A revolt in North Africa might bring Somaliland to the De Gaulle standard and, with support from Aden, British protectorate across the Red Sea, it might prove to be a thorn in the Italians' flanks in Ethiopia.

The fact that the Axis is fully aware of the danger of some change in North Africa's position is evidenced by reports of activity by German agents in Morocco and Italians in Tunis.

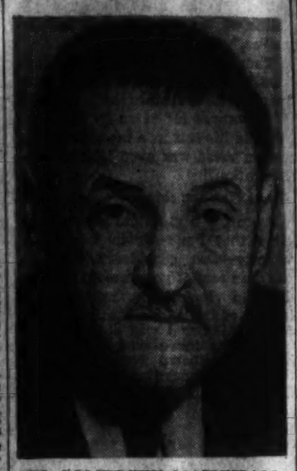
But the French believe they have the native population fully under control and do not doubt the loyalty of the Sultan of Morocco and other native chiefs.

The situation in French-mandated Syria is generally considered more optimistic for the "Free French" forces than in North Africa. Frenchmen there, it is said, consider that the Vichy government abandoned Syria to its fate following the arrival in the country of an Italian armistice mission, while there is also a tendency to blame Vichy because Syria is forced to suffer increasingly under the British blockade.

Gen. Georges Catroux, expert on Syria who formerly was governor-general of French Indo-China and now is De Gaulle's delegate-general in the Middle East, said in Cairo last week he estimated about 80 per cent of Frenchmen in Syria sympathize with the British cause.

Maugham Awaits End of War To Write Four More Novels

Important Thing Now Is Defeat of Hitler, Author Says Here



W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM

W. Somerset Maugham, the English author, stretched out in his suite at the Mayflower Hotel yesterday and reflected that it was much more comfortable than the iron decks of the collier in which he fled France last summer, and a good deal quieter than the London hotel room he left a month ago.

Here to see his friend of the last war, British Ambassador Lord Lothian, the novelist predicted that it would take two more years for England to defeat Hitler. "I hope it takes no longer," he said, "as I have four more novels I plan to write after the war, and you know I am growing old."

The defeat of Hitler, he thinks, is "the most important thing in the world just now." But this country can best help England by staying out of the war and continuing its material aid, he added. "We have plenty of food, but not nearly enough planes and merchant ships. And as for soldiers, England and the dominions can furnish more than we will need."

The creator of Philip Carey, since his last visit here two years ago, has lost his home in France, his books, and several uncompleted manuscripts because of the war. "But that is not important," he said. "What is important is that the world is saved from Nazi aggression."

He has vowed to write no more fiction until the war's end. "I simply cannot concentrate on plots and characters while this vital struggle is going on," he explained. At present he is writing magazine articles and is working on a book of his experiences in the last year as an agent of the British information office.

Hitler, Maugham thinks, might have succeeded had he attempted an invasion of England immediately after the fall of France. "But he will get a hot reception now. Defenses have been greatly strengthened and morale has not been diminished by the air raids."

Daytime raids are almost completely ignored, and those at night are beginning to bore the populace, he asserted. "They are dangerous, but one gets used to danger after a time," he said.

The author expects to go to the West Coast shortly to complete his book of war experiences. "I have been coming to this country for 30 years now and naturally have a large number of friends here," he said. He might return to England in the spring.

Since living in war zones for more than a year, he is now "amazed at the amount of food wasted by you Americans." A European could live for months on the food thrown away by the average small restaurant here in a single day, he observed.

The author of "Of Human Bondage," "The Summing Up," "Theater" and "Rain" said that he never will write a novel about the war. "I already had several plots in mind before the war began," he explained, "and see no reason for a story about the horrors now going on."

Proposed Hungary-Yugoslav Pact Baffling to Balkans

Copyright by New York Times

Belgrade, Dec. 2.—Count Stephen Csaky, the Hungarian foreign minister, is expected to arrive in Belgrade some time this week, in connection with a forthcoming Hungaro-Yugoslav pact of friendship, similar to that existing between this country and Bulgaria.

Diplomatic circles admit they are somewhat baffled about the aims of such a pact, negotiations for which, well-informed quarters say, were initiated by Germany. Normally, it should prove that Germany is merely interested in maintaining peace in the Balkans, and therefore intervened with Budapest to postpone all territorial claims against Yugoslavia.

However, Yugoslav military circles oppose the pact on the grounds that the general staff, in the event of an emergency arising, would be obliged to avoid taking any measures near the Hungarian border which might be interpreted as unfriendly. This necessity might arise just at a critical moment and endanger the defense of the country.

On the other hand, Rumanian circles hostile to Hungary see in the conclusion of such a pact an unfriendly act on the part of Yugoslavia. Italy is also believed to consider such a pact an unfriendly gesture.

One reason for conclusion of such a pact advanced questioningly in some diplomatic circles is that it would serve as an appeasement gesture toward Russia, proving to that country the German action in the Balkans is directed against no country which the Soviet might consider its sphere of influence.

In any event, the value of any eventual Hungaro-Yugoslav pact would be but theoretical, because at any moment if Germany or Italy wanted to extend its actions into the Balkans, Hungary would be compelled to follow the policy dictated by the Axis.

(Speculation that Yugoslavia would soon follow Hungary, Rumania and Slovakia in joining the German-Italian-Japanese alliance was revived in Budapest, the Associated Press said, with the statement of diplomatic sources that Adolf Hitler had conferred with Yugoslav Foreign Minister Cincar-Markovic in Berlin Sunday.

(In Berlin itself a foreign office spokesman thus met this report: "I have heard nothing about it."

(In Belgrade, official Yugoslav quarters admitted there was a "strong possibility" that Cincar-Markovic would go to Germany soon but insisted he had not conferred with Hitler over the weekend as reported in Budapest.)

Airlines Give U. S. Equipment Priority

Army, Navy to Get $7,500,000 Worth On Hand or Ordered

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Defense Commission announced last night that the commercial air lines have agreed to turn over to the Army and Navy more than $7,500,000 worth of aircraft equipment which they now have on hand or on order with manufacturers.

Included in the transfer are a quantity of engines already completed and awaiting installation in transports, which will enable a number of engineless big bombers and other warplanes to take the air. The greater portion of the equipment, however, represents planes, engines, propellors and spare parts scheduled for delivery to the air lines during 1941 and on which the Government is now granted priority.

The "bottleneck" in engine production has resulted in many four-engined "flying fortresses" and other warcraft being placed in storage when completed, pending the delivery of motors to propel them. Officials would not estimate last night the number of planes that will be made available immediately by the arrangement.

Cooperative Spirit Praised

The announcement, made by Administrator Donald M. Nelson for the commission's Priorities Board, followed a demand last week by Secretary of War Stimson that airline expansion should give way to defense needs. President Roosevelt also had expressed hope that the lines would not expand while the Army and Navy need planes.

Nelson said that new policies looking toward "accelerated delivery of military aircraft" have been formulated by the commercial aircraft priority committee and approved by the Priorities Board after a meeting with representatives of the various interests in the aviation industry.

"A spirit of cooperation was manifested by all concerned," he stated. "The scheduled airlines, by agreeing to give to the Air Corps these new engines, have greatly expedited equipment of additional combat aircraft.

"A program is being developed in cooperation with the air lines and the manufacturers which will permit release to the military services during 1941 of approximately $7,500,000 worth of equipment, part of which the air lines had planned to use in expanding their services.

Lines Hope to Get Planes, Too

"Temporary preference delivery instructions have been issued to airplane and engine manufacturers. While expediting equipment for military use, these instructions also are designed to assure maintenance of present services and normal replacement of existing equipment.

"Ways and means are being studied by the committee to permit delivery of additional planes to the air lines during 1941 and to permit continuation of current technical development activities."

Other defense developments of the day included:

Disclosure by the Army Air Corps that it had released to Great Britain a "flash-light bomb" developed by its experts at Dayton Field, Ohio, which makes it possible for enemy territory to be mapped at night. Aerial photographs can be made in darkness from high altitudes by means of the device, it was said.

President Roosevelt signed legislation invoking wartime sabotage penalties against national defense saboteurs. The measure provides penalties up to $10,000 fine and ten years' imprisonment.

The War Department announced plans for a $9,000,000 antiaircraft training center near Wilmington, N. C. Buildings to be constructed on leased coastal land will take care of six white and two colored regiments. They are to be ready by March 15.

Seek to Improve Schedules

Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transport Association, in a statement setting forth the willingness of the airlines to cooperate in the defense program, declared that conferences are being held to work out more effective schedules as a means of caring for increased air transport needs.

He said that besides the immediate transfer of engines to the Army and the release of $7,500,000 in aircraft orders to the military services, the plan agreed upon contemplates (1) the allocation to the airlines of engines for planes to be delivered early next summer, (2) the allocation of "necesary spare and replacement parts for the efficient operation of air transportation," and (3) "continuation of the program for the further development of modern aircraft for use by the airlines."

Violent Greek Attack Routed, Italians Say

Repulsed Everywhere With Great Losses, Communique Reports

By Herbert L. Matthews
Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Dec. 2.—The great violence of the Greek attack on the Italian right wing is admitted in today's war bulletin but it is claimed that the Greeks have been repulsed and thrown back.

Although brief and devoid of details as always, the communique again gives a picture of a desperate effort to hold off the continual onslaughts of the enemy.

"On the Greek front," says the war bulletin, "violent enemy attacks were everywhere repulsed. Thrown back by our counterattacks to their position of departure, the enemy suffered grave losses, especially on the right wing of the (Italian) Ninth army, where the attack, preceded by an intense artillery preparation, was conducted by an entire army corps.

"On the Eleventh army front two battalions of the Pusteria division and the Ferrara division particularly distinguished themselves. Col. Trizio fell gloriously at the head of the Forty-seventh Infantry Regiment."

The "right wing" referred to in the bulletin might well be the line before Argirocastro, which is obviously on the Italian right. It is to be noted that the Italian communiques have not admitted any retreat on any part of the front in the last eight days.

Italy's determination to see the war through, whatever the cost, was again shown today when the official gazette published a law authorizing the ministry of war to spend up to 14,000,000,000 lire additional for "the reinforcement of the war efficiency of the army."

Petain to Move Seat of State to Versailles

By G. H. Archambault
Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, Dec. 2.—Before leaving tonight for Marseille on the third of his tours of inspection in the free zone, Marshal Petain presided over a meeting of the cabinet after which a communique was issued which ended with this phrase:

"The cabinet afterwards dealt with diverse material questions entailed by the forthcoming installation of the chief of state in Versailles."

Thus in the oblique phraseology that is the hallmark of official communiques here comes the realization of a purpose indicated by the chief of state himself in a broadcast, long before there was even talk of "collaboration."

Move Was Expected

From the first Petain has made it clear that Paris—or its immediate vicinity—was considered by him the true seat of government and indeed, in view of the great centralization of the administration in this country the fact was obvious.

That the move was in prospect has been known for some time; that it was impending was indicated by the publication about a week ago—with the approval of the censor—of photographs of the Trianon Palace Hotel at Versailles and of a mansion adjoining "requisitioned by the French government." The deduction is that Petain will reside in the mansion and that administrative services will be accommodated in the hotel.

Departments Return

A number of governmental departments have already returned to Paris, such as public works, railroads, and postal services—the so-called "technical branches." The capital remains occupied by the German authority but the case will be different at Versailles.

It is understood that German troops began evacuating the town some time ago and that the chief of state will be there in a sort of annex to the free zone with full liberty of circulation and with a sort of corridor enabling free access to Vichy, where a number of governmental departments will remain.

No information is available tonight either regarding the date of the transfer or whether the diplomatic corps and foreign press will continue in Vichy.

State Draft Chiefs to Discuss Uniform Application of Rules

Uniform application of rules governing physical standards and deferments for dependency and occupational status of men called for military service will be sought at a conference of State Selective Service directors here next week.

National Director Dykstra, in calling the 48 State directors together for their first meeting, said that "many problems have developed in the initial phases of the military training program and that a general discussion of experience to date will make possible greater "uniformity" in future operations.

State procurement officers will accompany the directors to Washington, it was said, and will participate in the two-day meeting December 12 and 13.

Officials said they have no conclusive data as yet to the proportion of rejections for physical reasons or as to application of the regulations on deferments. A variance among local boards as to the strictness of the interpretation of physical standards and the policy on dependency and the "public necessity" of individual's civilian jobs was anticipated, however.

From the reports of the State directors, national headquarters can determine whether a revision of Selective Service regulations is necessary and what steps are required to make their application uniform. Dykstra, in announcing the meeting, declared that the huge Selective Service system had functioned "surprisingly" well.

"However, and as was to be expected in the course of its initial operation," he added, "many problems have developed. While none of these has been of a fundamental nature, and the majority were readily solved by the State and local boards involved, it is desirable for the uniformity of the entire system that the experience thus gained should be applied to all sections of the country."

4 Die in Mystery Powder Plant Blast

Sabotage Suspicion To Bring U. S. Into Tacoma, Wash., Probe

By the Associated Press

Tacoma, Wash., Dec. 2.—A mysterious detonation of a ton of dynamite blew four men to bits at the Frederickson plant of the Columbia Powder Co. today.

Company officials and police indicated the Federal Government would investigate the blast on the theory it resulted from sabotage.

It was the second such explosion in the Tacoma region in five days. Last Thursday, a black powder corning mill exploded at duPont, near Fort Lewis. No one was killed.

J. A. Denn, vice president of the Columbia Co., which is a subsidiary of the Winchester Arms and Winchester Powder companies, said the plant, 15 miles south of here, was not working on Government orders, but that it had just finished a national defense contract.

Undersheriff Clyde Knowles said the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Seattle had informed him the Federal Government "probably would look into the case."

Denn identified the dead men as: William Ketchum, 29; Alfred H. Loney, 40, and Fred Wilman, 50, all members of an early crew that prepared the mixing mill for the day's work, and John Stahle, 62, a night watchman.

Had the explosion occurred after 8 a. m. there would have been 65 men in the mixing mill, Denn said.

D. C. Greeks Hail Yugoslavia's Independence Day

Members of the local Greek community, worshiping at solemn high mass yesterday, saluted Yugoslavia on the twenty-second anniversary of its independence.

Formally attired diplomats and families from the Yugoslav Legation, seated in the front pews of SS. Constantine and Helen Greek Orthodox Church at Sixth and C Streets Southwest, heard the Rev. Thomas Daniels, pastor, declare in English:

"God save the King of Yugoslavia! God save the people of Yugoslavia, and bless them!"

Honored guests included Mme. Fotitch, wife of Constantin Fotitch, Yugoslav Minister plenipotentiary, who was unable to attend; their daughter, Pola; Dr. Vladimir Rybar, Legation counselor; R. B. Petrovitch, secretary; Col. Mirki Buria, military attache, and Mme. Buria; Dr. Bozidar Sarich, attache; Bogdan Radidsa, press attache, and Mme. Raidsa, and Serge Krizman, assistant press attache. Mr. and Mrs. Horace Ashton, friends of the Fotitches, also attended.

Roosevelt Sends Message to Church

Mount Vernon, N. Y., Dec. 1 (AP).—President Roosevelt wrote on the occasion of a church anniversary today that "the world never was more in need of the plain teachings of the Sermon on the Mount than it is today."

Congratulating the congregation of St. Paul's Church Eastchester on its 275th anniversary, the President wrote the Rev. W. Harold Weigle, the rector:

"I trust that the solemn Thanksgiving service you are planning to hold in commemoration of the founding of the parish will inspire all who participate to stand steadfast in their witness to the faith which is their riches' heritage."

Lumber Tie-up Looms as 2,000 Go on Strike

Many Mills Closed As C. I. O. and A. F. L. Act Together

By the Associated Press

Seattle, Dec. 2.—More than 2,000 lumber workers went on strike today in various Pacific Northwest mills in a threatened complete shutdown of the industry employing an estimated 45,000 men.

Five mills were closed at nearby Everett, Wash., and 500 other men walked out at a large logging company there.

The rapidly spreading strikes were expected to extend to Mineral, Wash., where 1,000 members of the combined C. I. O.-A. F. L. lumber union front said they would walk out.

Ten Tacoma sawmills already are closed and a big Weyerhaeuser plant near here has been down for six weeks.

Workers demand a seven and a half cents an hour wage increase and a week's vacation with pay.

Centralia, Wash., Dec. 2 (AP).—A. F. L. and C. I. O. unionists disregarded jurisdictional friction and united today in an effort to bring about "as broad a tie-up as possible" in the Pacific Northwest's vital lumber industry in their drive for higher wages.

Representatives of the A. F. of L. Lumber and Sawmill Workers' Union and the C. I. O. International Woodworkers of America met with 350 delegates from 78 local unions last night and pledged themselves to unite to "do everything necessary to effect as broad a tie-up of the Northwest lumber industry as possible."

The two unions agreed that any mill closed under a particular union would reopen under the same union. In other words, a C. I. O. mill closed by a strike would reopen as a C. I. O. mill.

Representatives from the C. I. O.-Inlandboatmen's Union and the Sailors Union of the Pacific and Masters, Mates and Pilots, both A. F. of L., pledged the timber workers their support.

Labor leaders said action of the conference presented the most solidified united labor movement in the timber industry since affiliation disputes split the lumber workers' ranks three years ago.

Vandenberg Suggests Trade Defense Board

Agency Would Fight, If Desirable, Barters With Barters

By the Associated Press

Senator Vandenburg (Republican), of Michigan, urged yesterday that Congress set up a new agency —"the Economic Defense Board of the United States"—to "deal realistically" with foreign trade problems and, if desirable, "combat barters with barters."

Submitting legislation to effectuate his proposal, he said the seven-member, bi-partisan body would supersede the present tariff commission and would take over the functions of the State Department's reciprocal trade division.

"Regardless of the trends of military war," the Michigan Senator declared, "we face an inevitable international economic war which will be just as ruthless and, in its economic aspects, just as deadly as the military war regardless of the outcome of the latter. Indeed, we are in it already."

Saying his legislation called for "national economic defense," Vandenberg added that it "creates an instrumentality clothed with authority to combat barters with barters, if desirable, and to deal realistically with all of the other economic devices which are now used, far more often than tariffs, to dominate and channel foreign trade."

He added that the bill was designed to give "parity protection for American agriculture," to preserve wage, price and living standards and to encourage American exports.

Senator Ball (Republican), of Minnesota, introduced a bill to create in the Labor Department a defense industry-labor conciliation service for mediation of disputes between workers and employers.

Employes wishing to negotiate a collective bargaining agreement would be required to give employers 20 days' written notice. If no agreement were reached in that period and the employes wanted to strike they would have to give a further notice of 30 days. Issues involved would be aired meanwhile before a national defense arbitration board

Ten D. C. Selectives Join Antitank Unit

Forty-eight days after they registered for the Nation's first peacetime selection of men for military service, ten District recruits yesterday were assigned to duty with a unit of the Army.

They were among 106 selected men turned over for a year's training to the Ninety-third Antitank Battalion at Fort George G. Mead, Md., where they entered the Army last week. The District's contingent, nine from Washington and one from Alexandria, were all assigned to Company A, commanded by Capt. Howard R. Johnson.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, local Selective Service head, revealed that 4,000 new questionnaires had been sent men who registered October 16 and whose names were drawn in the national lottery October 29. From these, he indicated, at least 1,000 men should become available for induction during January, if that many were called for. The January quota is not yet known.

Addressed by Col. Gill

Before being assigned to companies at Meade, the 106 selectees were marched to the battalion camp, where Lieut. Col. Isaac Gill, jr., battalion commander, addressed them briefly. Then they were initiated into the mysteries of the 37-millimeter antitank gun with which they will train for the next year.

"You're being assigned to a permanent organization in the United States Army," Col. Gill told them, "the best army in the world because it has the best soldiers in the world. Your first job now will be to become trained as soldiers, then as part of the organization—one of three antitank battalions now in the Army."

Before being completely absorbed into the battalion, he said, the recruits would be given two weeks of intensive basic training. In that time, Col. Gill explained, they would be given every opportunity to make soldiers of themselves.

"If there's anything you don't understand," he said, "ask one of your recruit instructors; ask your company commander or ask me. We want to help you learn."

Assigned to Company A

The ten men, now privates in Company A, Ninety-third Antitank Battalion, are Charles W. Dean, 1650 Harvard Street Northwest; Warren D. Feldman, 1601 Hobart Street Northwest; Joseph I. Fox, 650 F Street Northwest; Joseph Goldsmith, 4800 Georgia Avenue Northwest; Chester J. Handler, 616 Rittenhouse Street Northwest; Rocco Panetta, 4218 Thirteenth Street Northeast; Albert I. Sawyer, 1317 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast; George Weiner, 2600 Sixteenth Street Northwest; Thomas A. Whelan, 1817 F Street Northwest, and John C. Swank, jr., Alexandria.

Last night they transferred their effects from the brick barracks which the Regulars vacated to make room for selectees, to tents occupied by the antitank battalion. These tents, wood-walled and floored, are heated by specially designed stoves and offer considerably more privacy than the large barracks squadrooms.

It was understood that several District selectees would be among 128 to be assigned to a school for training men to operate a new temporary recruit reception center at New Cumberland, Pa. This center will be opened early in January.

In Washington, Gen. Cox said yesterday he has called a meeting of local board chairmen, Government appeal agents and members of registrants advisory boards to map out a program for uniform handling of classification for dependency. It was pointed out that local boards so far have used their own discretion in determining how far, if at all, a registrant should be deferred in case his wife works as well as he. The meeting will be held Thursday at 5 p. m. at the Mayflower Hotel.

3 Boards in New Quarters

Three local boards yesterday moved into new quarters following Gen. Cox's request that housing expenses be cut down to the $40 to $60 a month allowed for that purpose. Free office space in public schools has proven unsatisfactory, in that heat and other costs in some cases have amounted to as much as $200 a month.

Board No. 9 moved from Weightman School, Twenty-third and M Streets Northwest, to 710 Fourteenth Street Northwest. Board No. 4 moved to the Takoma Theater Building, Fourth and Butternut Streets Northwest, from Calvin Coolidge School, Fifth and Tuckerman Streets Northwest. Board No. 15 moved from Bowen School, Third and K Streets Southwest, to 616 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast.

Board No. 6 announced it would move today from Raymond School, Tenth Street and Spring Road Northwest, to Tenth Precinct Station, 750 Park Road Northwest. Five other boards already have moved and most of the other 16 are expected to move as soon as suitable quarters within their budgets can be found.

Gunman Is Caught In 3d Laundry Holdup

Martin G. Geldner, 63, operator of a laundry at 1545 New Jersey Avenue Northwest, got the last laugh yesterday. He was held up and robbed for the third time since July, but this time the bandit was caught.

Ten minutes after a colored gunman had taken 20 cents, an overcoat and two suits, police captured him in a nearby alley. In the last two robberies Geldner lost a total of $30.25.

Geldner confessed yesterday that operating the laundry was becoming exciting business—too exciting—and he was thinking of retiring at the instance of his family.

Citizens' Chief Decries Lack of D. C. Ballot

Harry N. Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, declared last night that the residents of the District have been put into the "same class as idiots" and other groups denied the ballot.

He told the annual banquet of the Hampshire Heights Citizens Association that he had sat disconsolate on election night, listening to the radio returns, thinking about the complete injustice of a disenfranchised Washington.

But he extended the hope that by continuous work and insistence the people of Washington would eventually obtain the vote.

Throughout the banquet received with cheers the announcement by Master of Ceremonies J. Leon Bord that the Commissioners had approved the proposal for premarital medical examinations. The Hampshire Heights Association was the first to advocate this proposal, Bord said. The plan was later approved by other citizens groups and the federation.

Thomas Joy, of the Chillum Heights Association, and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Hamill, of the Petworth Association, were among the guests of honor.

Georgetown Progressive

While making clear that they do not oppose the Washington Self-Help Exchange as an organization, members of the Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown forwarded to zoning officials a petition asking that the exchange be kept out of its new location on Q Street near Wisconsin Avenue.

Signers of the petition complained that the quarters into which the Exchange is about to move is in a residential section, and pointed out that the organization has "commercial aspects." The Exchange, which enables needy persons to help themselves through work, operates several trucks for moving materials in and out of its headquarters, association members said.

The association also adopted a resolution opposing the Reservoir Road area behind the public library branch as a new fire company site. The organization has previously gone on record as favoring the place as a park area, to be used as an "outdoor reading room" for children. Last night's resolution recommended that the proposed new firehouse be erected next to No. 7 Precinct station on Volta Place.

Takoma Park

The originality and imagination of Takoma Park policemen came in for a severe belting last night at a meeting of the Takoma Park Citizens Association.

Complaints were voiced that officers directing traffic, "especially at school intersections," were too ingenious in their hand signals.

"You have to be a mind reader to know what they mean," one member declared.

The critics charged that no two policemen used the same system.

The association adopted a resolution asking the police department to issue uniform regulations on the subject.

Meeting at the Takoma Park (D. C.) elementary school, the association also urged the adoption of a crosstown bus service on Military Road and Concord Avenue, running from Western Avenue to Bladensburg Road.

Wallace Magathan, president of the association, reported that the Capital Transit Co. had promised to construct a "Y" track near Fourth and Butternut Streets Northwest, and the association voted to push this proposal before the Public Utilities Commission.

The association adopted a resolution opposing a zoning change in the 200 block of Cedar Street and the south side of Eastern Avenue, between Cedar Street and Piney Branch Road, to permit the construction of apartment houses.

Kenilworth

Because lack of heating facilities are threatening winter activities in their Community Center Building at Kenilworth Avenue and Ord Street Northeast, members of the Kenilworth Citizens Association last night decided to go to Representative Jennings Randolph, chairman of the House District Committee, about it.

Previous efforts to get badly needed repairs have produced no results, it was pointed out. Randolph will be approached as a last resort to see that the heating plant will be in operation before "too cold" weather sets in.

Charles Maize, association president, was assigned to ask Capital Transit Co. officials for more streetcar service in Kenilworth during the holiday season.

C. A. Wood, president of the Benning Citizens Association, spoke before the group, which met in the Kenilworth School, urging support of an airport on the canal at Benning, and for new equipment for the Benning Fire Company.

Forest Hills

Any effort to obtain a permit for erecting a proposed night club on upper Connecticut Avenue will be vigorously opposed by the Forest Hills Citizens Association, the organization decided last night at a meeting in Ben Murch School.

The association voted to ask the District engineer's office for immediate notification if such a permit is applied for. Franklin T. Baldwin, secretary, was instructed to keep a close watch on developments.

L. A. Carruthers was instructed, in another resolution, to discuss free water meters with the District water division. S. B. Cissel was made chairman of a committee to study Connecticut Avenue traffic signals in an effort to reduce the recent heavy traffic toll in that section. J. Sanders, chairman of the zoning committee, was instructed to "seriously oppose" any change in regulations limiting the height of buildings.

Metropolis View

Metropolis View Citizens Association members last night urged a new cross-town bus line to serve their community and adjoining sections of the Capital. The route, recommended in an adopted resolution, would start on Western Avenue west of Wisconsin Avenue, and run to Bladensburg Road Northeast.

Vincent Boudren, association president, named Samuel Sidotti chairman of a committee to study traffic difficulties at Fourth Street and Rhode Island Avenue Northeast.

James E. Colliflower, president of the Washington Board of Trade, has accepted an invitation to speak at the association's annual Christmas event December 23 at the St. Vincent's Home and School, Fourth and Edgewood Streets Northeast, Boudren announced. The program will be preceded by a parade to be led by the Elks Boys Band. Several Boy Scout troops will march.

Family Head Defined in Tax Appeal

$2,500 Exemption Denied Man Who Supports Cousin's Wife; $400 Allowed

For tax purposes Uncle Sam considers the "head of a family" to be a person supporting and maintaining in his household one or more persons close to him by blood relationship, marriage or adoption, the United States Court of Appeals held yesterday.

The court upheld the finding of the United States Board of Tax Appeals that a bachelor, Percy Wade, supporting the wife of a second cousin, was not the head of a family.

Wade went to live with the cousin and wife when he was 17 years old, the court said. He was treated by them as a son for some ten years until his cousin disappeared. Regarding the deserted wife as his mother, and feeling that her maintenance was his duty, Wade became her support. He is now nearly 60 years old.

Wade filed his income-tax return for 1936 as the head of a family, claiming the allowed $2,500 exemption. His claim was disapproved and he was allowed a $400 deduction for one dependent.

Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner wrote the opinion. Also hearing the case were Associate Justices Miller and Rutledge.

Bar Unit Asks 5th D.C. Police Court Judge

The addition of one judge to the four-man bench of the District's Police Court was recommended yesterday by the Police Court committee of the District Bar Association.

Pointing out that the four branches of the court disposed of a total of 57,385 cases during 1938—an average of 55 cases a day for each judge—the committee declared that "notwithstanding that the court is overworked, it has managed, with commendable diligence, to prevent any excessive accumulation of undisposed cases."

The committee stated that after an investigation of the Probation Office, it found the personnel of the office should be increased. Each of the six members of the office staff handled approximately 725 probation cases during 1939, it was revealed.

Commending the work of the office, the committee's statement declared that "in order to safeguard the rights of the defendants, many of whom are first offenders, the personnel should be augmented by at least one, or possibly two, probation officers."

John J. Carmody is chairman of the committee, which includes H. Russell Bishop, James P. Donovan, Arthur C. Elgin, Charles E. Paine, Norman E. Sill and William B. Wolf.

Pearson Sworn In As Tax Collector

Guy W. Pearson, former chief clerk of the District Engineer Department, was sworn in yesterday as collector of taxes, succeeding Chatham Towers, who retired last Saturday.

Pearson's place was taken by Porter M. Lumpkins, former chief clerk of the Highway Department. Both were administered their oaths of office in the presence of the various department heads and Commissioners David McCoach, jr., and J. Russell Young. A brief reception followed the ceremonies in Commissioner Young's office.

Liquor-Store Holdup Nets Gunman $75

A gunman last night held up a liquor store at 85 Florida Avenue Northeast and escaped with $75.

The proprietor, Sidney Wolfe, was alone in the store when the robber, a tall colored man, entered and ordered a pint of whiskey. When he turned around the bandit pushed the gun into his back and ordered him to empty the cash register. The robber escaped in a black taxicab that police believe was operated by an accomplice.

Working for Washington

Rock Creek Association Seeks More Colored Play Facilities

The No. 1 aim this month of the 21-year-old Rock Creek Civic Association is more recreational facilities for colored children in Georgetown.

Dr. Marshall

This drive is the logical successor to successful efforts of the association in the past, its president, Dr. C. Herbert Marshall, said yesterday.

"In 1925 our organization helped obtain the Francis Junior High School, at Twenty-fourth and N Streets Northwest, and three years later it was influential in having the swimming pool built on a plot adjoining the school.

"Since then, we have aided in developing the Rose Park playground, at Twenty-seventh and P Streets Northwest, and have constantly urged more such facilities for the Georgetown youngsters," he added.

Members hope to see a recreation house added to the Rose Park playground this winter. To show their sincerity, they are willing to make a donation from their treasury toward the project, Dr. Marshall reported.

The association's Christmas activities, as in the past, will include support of the "candy fund," which provides gifts of candy to needy youngsters in the area, and the annual "poor children's dinner."

In the past, members have consistently urged suffrage for Washington. The association was the first to contribute funds to the D. C. Suffrage Association, the president said.

Meetings are held on the fourth Wednesday of each month in the Ebenezer A. M. E. Church, at Twenty-eighth and O Streets Northwest. Besides Dr. Marshall, officers include Mrs. Oberita Butler, vice president; Mrs. Eleanor Ricks, corresponding secretary; Miss Doris Bowman, recording secretary; Dr. Joseph N. Dodson, financial secretary; Clarnece W. Warren, treasurer; and Mrs. Rachel Owens, chaplain.

Delegates to the Federation of Civic Associations are Dr. Marshall, Edward F. Lawson, Richard N. Carter, Miss Helen Allen, and Mrs. Eleanor Ricks.

C. I. O. Here Backs ADA House Bill

Greater Borrowing Power for Alley Dwelling Authority Urged; Asks Setup

The Industrial Union Council, assembly of C. I. O. locals here, last night placed its support behind a House bill which would enlarge the borrowing powers of the Alley Dwelling Authority and set it up as a permanent agency engaged in eliminating slum dwellings and constructing new low-cost housing.

The council urged that Congress remove a clause of the A. D. A. Act which requires that the agency be run by Government officials and asked that, instead, a five-man board be named, made up of District citizens, including a labor representative.

Convention Delegate Named

The civil liberties committee was delegated to investigate charges of civil liberties violations in the Government service.

Sidney Katz was elected delegate to the Maryland-District C. I. O. Convention, to be held in Hagerstown December 12-13-14, and he was instructed to offer three resolutions, calling for more adequate representation of labor in defense agencies, elimination of discrimination against colored citizens by the defense agencies and the military forces and support of the mine inspection bill.

Vultee Workers Commended

The Vultee aircraft workers were commended in a resolution for their "victory . . . in face of tremendous difficulties, such as intervention by the Justice Department and the Dies Committee. "The strike showed the people of the Nation, the resolution stated, that true national defense" rests on paying every workman a living wage, which can be achieved only through collective bargaining."

The Smith and Hoffman bills, introduced in the House, which propose to regulate strikes in defense industries, were condemned by the council.

Union Bars Man From Job, Is Charge

A complaint from an unidentified labor foreman engaged on a national defense construction job at Fort Belvoir, Va., that he could not continue work without joining the Building Laborers Local, No. 74, of Washington, was placed in the Congressional Record yesterday.

Representative Hoffman (Republican), of Michigan, read the letter to the House and stated he had hundreds more similar complaints, one of which he released to the press but did not place in the Record.

The letter from the labor foreman stated that he worked for Potts & Callahan at Fort Belvoir until last Friday. Written earlier in the week, the letter stated that the writer had been warned that he would have to join the union by Friday or be dismissed. The cost of joining, he said, was $58.

Subsequently it was stated upon behalf of the contractor and the Laborers' District Council that the defense construction of barracks and cantonments is a "closed shop" job, the decision having been made by the contractor.

Representative Hoffman, who last week introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War to furnish the House with information showing whether or not civilian employes are required to join labor unions, said he will read some of the letters of complaint he has received every day the House meets.

The second letter, which Hoffman gave to the press, was ostensibly from a steamfitter who complained that he could not get a job at Fort Meade, Md., or Fort Belvoir because he had allowed his union membership to lapse and owed $220 in dues and fines.

"I am walking the streets looking for work when there are Government jobs going begging at $14," he wrote. "It seems a shame that a man cannot get a chance to earn an honest living for his family. What right has a body of men to keep a man from making a living on Government projects? It's a crime."

Inquiry Ordered On Tax-Free Land

The Commissioners yesterday named a three-man committee to conduct a city-wide survey of privately owned, tax-exempt property. The committee is to report on the manner in which each property holder is complying with regulations governing tax-free land.

The committee includes Walter L. Fowler, assistant corporation counsel; F. F. Healy, District surveyor, and Ben Adams, assistant assessor. It has been estimated that tax-exempt property in Washington is valued at $111,794,179. The committee was named following a conference between the Commissioners, Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech and Tax Assessor Edward Dent.

Truckman Loads Lumber With Fractured Neck

Henry M. Delong, 26, of Washington, and Clarence Ransom, of Seat Pleasant, Md., had quite a job reloading their truck with lumber after it overturned at a street intersection in Baltimore yesterday.

When the job was done 20 minutes later, Delong suddenly collapsed, the Associated Press reported.

At Johns Hopkins Hospital, doctors said he had fractured his neck. His condition is critical.

"YOU ON TOAST" is no doubt often heard by these three when they ask, "What's yours, sir?" But last night they were paid a real compliment when they were chosen winner and runners-up in the beauty contest staged at the National Restaurant Association convention in the Mayflower Hotel. Fay Carter (left), of the Hot Shoppes, third place; Violet Riordan, of the S. and W., first place, and Ann Wilde, also of the Hot Shoppes, second place

Malnutrition through almost universally bad food habits is "an unfortified coastline of our human defenses," Miss Harriet Elliott, of the National Defense Commission, yesterday told delegates to the three-day Southeastern Convention of the National Restaurant Association at the Mayflower.

Restaurant operators are in a unique position to aid the national defense, she asserted, urging that they educate their millions of patrons to better eating habits to improve the civilian health level.

Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox urged the 300 restaurateurs to cooperate in backing a drive for total defense. "The situation has passed the serious state and become critical," he warned.

The District Selective Service director compared our defense laxity before last summer to Nero's fiddling while Rome burned. He called cooperation by civilians with the Nation's armed forces "essential for any adequate defense."

Miss Grace Smith, of Toledo, newly elected president of the national association, suggested a Nation-wide educational program to be sponsored by the restaurant operators, with the dual purpose of improving the national eating habits and obtaining help better trained to offer balanced quality meals.

"The last war left us calorie-conscious; the problem now is to become quality-conscious. Much food with low vitamin content is just as bad as too little food," she reported.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, superintendent of the District Health Department, welcomed the visiting delegates and stressed sanitation of eating utensile as important in furthering national health.

Convention delegates last night attended a reception in honor of Miss Smith, and witnessed a personality contest and uniform fashion show in which 35 Washington waitresses participated. Principal speaker in the evening session was James Watson, of Chicago.

Meanwhile, exhibits of food and restaurant equipment, in the hotel lobby, attracted a crowd estimated at more than a thousand during the day. One exhibitor said he had given away 900 doughnuts from 11 a. m. to 9 p. m.

Today's program begins with an "Early Bird" breakfast at 8 a. m. and meetings begin at 10 a. m.

Cleric Dons Mechanic's Garb, Preaches to Men in Overalls

The Rev. Thomas E. Boorde pulled on a pair of his son's mechanic's jumpers last night and joined overalled members of his congregation in worship at the Anacostia Baptist Church.

It was Dr. Boorde's idea that if he encouraged men to come to church by dispensing with the usual change from work clothes to Sunday best, he would not only have a large audience, but a suitable atmosphere in which to hammer home homely facts about the importance of solid family life.

He was right both ways. More than 50 male members of the congregation—"more than we expected"—left newspapers and firesides and came to listen intently as Dr. Boorde declared, in effect:

The home, smallest but basic unit of government, is what governments exist for. And if that isn't true, what is all the fighting in the world about?

He said the character of the home largely is a product of the character of men and if men live loosely, society and its government disintegrate. He chose as his text the Fifth Commandment:

"Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land that the Lord thy God giveth thee."

His theme was: "The Gospel Only, and Only the Gospel Can Save America and the World." He said the place to start is at home and recalled Christ's condemnation of a man careless about offending the child that believes in him.

Dr. Boorde will conduct similar services in his church nightly this week.

Child Killed On Leaving School Bus

Two Other Children Injured by Auto; Man Held as Driver Pending Inquiry

An 8-year-old Vienna, Va., girl was fatally hurt and two playmates were injured early last evening when they were hit by an automobile after stepping from a school bus.

Lois Gayle Newberry died in Georgetown Hospital shortly after being rushed there by her father. Caroline Williar, 8, and her brother Wayne, 6, escaped with minor injuries.

The accident occurred, Fairfax County police said, when the children got off the school bus on Chain Bridge Road just outside of Vienna and started to cross the street to their farm home. Police held Richard G. King, of Vienna, as driver of the car pending further investigation.

Mrs. Madalyne Butler, 32, of Winchester, Va., suffered severe head injuries and fractures to the left leg and knee, and Miss Irene Argabright, 30, also of Winchester, received lacerations to the head, in an accident at Capitol Heights, Md. They were brought to Casualty Hospital by the Branchville rescue squad.

Held in Girl's Death

In Washington a coroner's jury ordered Philip H. Anderson, 24, of 5508 Broad Branch Road Northwest, held for the action of the grand jury in connection with the death Saturday of Miss Betty Stowell, 14, Marjorie Webster School student.

Anderson, who is the son of Col. P. M. Anderson, retired Army officer, is alleged to have been the driver of the car which crashed into a tree on Wise Road near Western Avenue Northwest and fatally injured Miss Stowell. Seriously hurt in the same crash was Miss Patricia Kelly, 20, of 1701 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, a former Webster School student, who is in critical condition at Emergency Hospital.

Diplomatic Immunity

Meanwhile, five persons pleading diplomatic immunity were among 98 motorists whose traffic tickets were fixed last week, according to a list made public by police.

The list included 13 whose tickets were canceled outright and 85 who were let off with warnings.

Those escaping fines through diplomatic immunity were Mario Romero, Mexican Embassy; Lieut. Col. A. Jamamoto, Japanese Embassy; Erich Mueller, German Embassy; Claudine Benoit, French Embassy, and Karl Odie, German Embassy.

Officials to Meet

Washington's traffic ills will receive expert attention today at a special meeting between the four Police Court judges, District Commissioners and officials of the police and traffic departments.

The conference is scheduled for 3 p. m. at the District Building. In addition to the judges and Commissioners, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent; Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, Inspector Arthur Miller, Inspector William E. Holmes and Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech will attend the meeting.

The group is expected to formulate plans for better coordination of all agencies charged with control and regulation of local traffic.

Bus Line Extended On Trinidad Route

The Glover Park-Trinidad bus line was extended yesterday to serve residents in a duplex apartment settlement near Forty-first Street and Davis Place Northwest, the Public Utilities Commission announced.

Plans for the new service were adopted at a meeting of the P. U. C., Capital Transit Co., and citizens of the community. Under the agreement, the bus line will turn into Thirty-ninth Street from Calvert, circle the Benjamin Stoddert School along Davis Place and return to Calvert by way of Forty-first Street. A terminal will be established at Forty-first and Davis.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

A Short Subject Attains World Premiere' Dignity

Earle Unveils 'March On, Marines' Thursday; The Stars Drop Manna to the Drama Desks; This, That and the Other About the Theater

HAVING ACHIEVED high standing in and out of the industry with their patriotic short subjects in Technicolor—there is a long catalogue of them already on the books—the Warner Brothers continue to wave the flag in admirable and inspiring fashion. Their latest contribution to the library of Americanism is an item bearing the title of "March On, Marines," this branch of Uncle Sam's armed service somehow having been more or less overlooked in the earlier contemplations of America's greatness and the manifold reasons therefor.

BELL

Dennis Morgan has the leading role in "March On, Marines," that of a young marine who earns a scholarship at Annapolis by concentrated effort and hard work. The Technicolorette, in a manner of speaking, does for the "soldiers of the sea" what "Service With the Flag" did for life in the Army. Its "world premiere" will be celebrated at the Earle Theater this Thursday, December 5, when the major screen attraction will be "One Night in the Tropics," with Allan Jones, Nancy Kelly and Abbott and Costello heading the cast, and the "Fun on the Loose" stage revue headlined by Patricia "Old Man Mose Is Dead" Norman, almost a Washingtonian by virtue of her kinship with Hardie Meakin, manager of RKO-Keith's.

But the point is that these short reels are taking on real importance when they are deemed worthy of "world premieres" by their sponsors. They deserved the recognition long ago.

Perhaps it is time to begin tearing a little hair over the Film Daily's pudge to get busy on our guess as to the "Ten Best Pictures" of the year, even if the deadline isn't until the last day of the current month. Word is out in Hollywood that ballots for the nomination of the candidates for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' annual awards will be in the mail on December 12. This has nothing to do with Mr. Alicoate's widely read trade journal, but is, nevertheless, a straw in the wind, as you might say. The Academy prize statuettes, dubbed "Oscars" incongruously enough, will be bestowed according to the vote of a committee of judges, which, according to custom, President Walter F. Wanger has decreed shall consist of three members, with alternates, chosen from the Screen Actors Guild, the Screen Directors Guild and the Screen Writers Guild to serve with three producers and three members of the science branches of the industry on the awards bench.

Let's see, now, ten out of 431 . . .

It is a sturdy group of "show people" concerned in "Off the Record," the new John Shubert comedy current at the National prior to its invasion of New York. This was pretty conclusively brought out at luncheon yesterday, when the drama desks lamb-chopped and parfaited with Producer John Shubert, Bruce Cabot, Mary Brian, Hugh O'Connell, Betty Furness and Dennie Moore, stars of the piece, and Manager Edmun Riohn, of the National. The youngest of the Shuberts, Mr. Cabot and Mr. O'Connell are stalwart young men with their feet firmly on the ground, when not tucked under a laden table, and the girls are all beauties who would lend any stage play a surplusage of charm.

Strangely enough, all of the merry chatter yesterday had little or nothing to do with "Off the Record," although a great deal of it was! There will be more of all this here later, after we have had a minute or two to sift the "leave to print" persiflage from the "mustn't-mustn't"—if you get the idea. Anyhow, it was a delightful way to start the day.

If it is the print you have been worrying about, Comdr. Harvey Haislip, United States Navy, retired, will arrive in town today or early tomorrow with a can full of "Flight Command," scheduled for its "hemisphere premiere" at Loew's Capitol Theater the night of Tuesday, December 17. It will be shown first to the Navy Board of Review, since it was produced with the full cooperation of the United States Navy Department. So now you know.

So here comes another of the high-pressure boys. Frank Braden, dean of the country's amusement publicists, and for 12 years with the press department of the Ringling Brothers-Barnum & Bailey Circus—it was reputedly he who engineered the perching of that midget on the Morgan knee—is on a junket of the key cities to pave the way for the highly controversial Walt Disney-Leopold Stokowski collaboration, "Fantasia." It is heartening to everything but one's sales resistance, digestive tract and nervous system that Washington is at the top of the list of Mr. Braden's ports of call. The other towns are Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago. Just when and where "Fantasia" is to be shown here only God and Mr. Braden seem to know. A theater practically has to be rebuilt to house it.

How-to-Dodge-a-Deadline Note

Don't go to theatrical luncheons of a Monday. The clock always stops.

New Charade Proves Sheer Farce-Comedy

'Off the Record' Stentoriously Acted By Big 'Name' Cast

By Nelson B. Bell

"OFF THE RECORD." John Shubert presents a new comedy in three acts and five scenes, by Parke Levy and Alan Lipscott, from a story by George A. Hendon, jr., and David Pelta. Staged by Anton Bundsmann, with settings by Lawrence L. Goldwasser; costumes by Bianca Stroock. At the National Theater.

Laying no claim to subtlety, legitimate satire or any of the gentler nuances of subdued comedy—or at least realizing none last evening—the new frolic John Shubert brought into the National Theater for its first metropolitan performance last night reverted to the form and manner of slambang farce and launched a power play toward a goal of high hilarity that it reached more often than not.

"Off the Record" is no placid number. It is sheer farce-comedy that places its reliance upon speed, situation and sublime nonsense. Threaded through its theme of crooked politics in an unnamed Southern State, not too difficult to identify, are all of the crazy extravagances and cockeyed developments necessary to the achievement of a slightly demented evening in the theater.

There is so much of this lunatic embroidery, as a matter of fact, that a great deal of its gets in the way of a plot that could do with a bit of simplification and clarification to the end of more sharply defined motivation and ultimate purpose. The basic idea of not only voting dead men, but electing a deceased Governor to the United States Senate through the agency of a library of his old recorded speeches—that's where the title comes in—is a honey. It opens the way for the introduction of all those bizarre ramifications without which farce ceases to be farce. Sprouts that now droop on the vine can, and no doubt will be, pruned from both dialogue and action.

"Hail, Hail, Etc."

The three acts and five scenes cover the two days' preceding an election. That sturdy old son of the South, Gov. John P. Upjohn, the bosom friend of every political plunderer, who has built up a machine that can get away with building dams where there is no river, is in a fair way to win, until he succumbs to an overdose of vitamin G, his pet name for gin, in the lockless love nest of Myrtle De Lime, his favorite blonde relaxation. He stands in a fair way to win, as it turns out, even after that. How to put him over devolves upon his boss office man, a bewildered secretary, a personal physician who labors under the persistent stigma of having broken his first patient's back on his maiden day as a chiropractor, and an assorted menagerie of bodyguards, henchmen, hillbilly relatives, wardens, convicted criminals, whose talents are needed by the cause; the newspaper crew, a prying psychiatrist, a professor of phonetics, who pinch-hits for the phonograph records when the need is pressing; the Judge's niece, and, of course, Myrtle, who comes in handy to masquerade as the corpse's nurse when the necessity of his being alive becomes acute. That will give you a rough idea.

Recruited largely from the films, the cast stood in need of vocal soft-pedaling at last evening's premiere. There was, naturally, some uncertainity as to lines and "business," but, by and large, they romped through a lusty and laughable "first night" with high voltage efficiency and a firm grasp of the fact that they were not engaged in delivering a "message" or contributing anything "significant."

Cabot Makes Stage Debut

Bruce Cabot, as the resourceful office executive, and enjoying his first essay at a role back of the footlights, played with intelligence and a world of vigor that will gain in effectiveness when he tones down his voice to the dimensions of the theater. His telephone seemed a shade superfluous last night. He could have opened a window. His Nicky Allen was a breezy, likable, rough-and-ready young sparkplug, nevertheless, with a touch of charm and buoyant youth about him. In the role of the secretary and potential bride, Betty Furness proved a young actress of poise and charm and Mary Brian, as the scheming little niece, brought authority to a part a trifle on the feline side. Dennie Moore is cast in a made-to-order character as Myrtle, the fountainhead of the farce's zippiest humor, and as the fearfully ethical Dr. Otis Horse, Hugh O'Connell furnishes an invaluable brand of deliberate drollery to balance the frenzy of the others.

You'll either laugh enormously or be bored stiff. Last night's audience was preponderantly in the laughing mood—and there were many Southern statesmen in it, at that.

Back Again Among the Stars

MARY BRIAN,

last seen in Washington in "Three After Three," appears in one of the principal roles in John Shubert's new comedy, "Off the Record," which opened last night in the National Theater. Other stage and screen celebrities in the cast include Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness, Dennie Moore and Hugh O'Connell. "Off the Record" is being presented in the Capital prior to its Broadway engagement

Hollywood Bids For Adele Astaire

Boris Morros today revealed that he is attempting to reunite the world's greatest dance team—Fred and Adele Astaire, Lary Cavendish.

Fred Astaire has just completed "Second Chorus" for Morros, which Paramount is releasing. In that picture, he is teamed with Paulette Goddard. Adele Astaire is the sister of Fred. The two formed a dancing team from the age of 5 until 1932, but broke up when Adele married Lord Cavendish and retired.

'Hopalong's' Scarf Carefully Guarded

A piece of silk cloth, blue with a cross-plaid, is probably the country's most jealously guarded bit of cloth.

It is the scarf which William Boyd wears in his role of Hopalong Cassidy in the Harry Sherman series. Boyd has been wearing it six years, and is now using it in "In Old Colorado," his thirty-third picture as Hopalong.

Boyd purchased the scarf to wear when he started the series, but bought only one. Now it's a trademark of "Hopalong."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Pittsburgh, Dec. 2 (INS).—Biggest news over the week-end is that Irving Berlin has been signed by Paramount to write the most elaborate musical ever produced on that lot, to star Bing Crosby and Mary Martin. Not only is Irving in charge of the words and music, but it's up to him to think up the title of the picture, too—probably inspired by the hit tune. So eager is Para to get the best show Irving ever wrote they're giving him a year's time for inspiration to set in. The picture won't be started until next November.

PARSONS

Ever since "Dispatch From Reuters" Edward G. Robinson has been about the most popular actor in Hollywood with the newspaper clan. That's one newspaper picture that showed the press as it really is and deserves the big box-office success it has had. How different from the usual false picture of drunken reporters and high-tempered managing editors. So it's interesting indeed to learn that Eddie's next will be "The Man They Couldn't Kill," a comedy by Sidney Biddell and Frederick Frank. It's about a movie actor who has played so many gangster roles he has a mental lapse and honestly believes he's a bad man.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: When Athole Shearer's divorce from Howard Hawks becomes final, talk is he'll marry Nancy Gross. Just as we told you, the Eleanor Powell-Merrill Pye romance is over and her heart interest now is tall, dark and handsome Los Angeles attorney, Joseph Brandlin. Jimmy Cagney, reading newspaper headlines on the set, wise-cracked: "Now maybe those Italians will beware of Greeks bearing rifts!" Orson Welles has turned thumbs down on a sneak preview of "Citizen Kane;" he says it goes out as is.

Haven't heard much about Rex Ingram and Alice Terry in some time, so it's news to hear they're leaving for Mexico City for six months. Wouldn't be surprised if Rex interested in Mexican movie making. Virginia Field and George Raft, in riding habits in the early morning, window shopping on Wilshire Boulevard before the stores opened. Ruth Foran left for New York over the week-end, and from there she goes to South America to spend most of the winter with friends. Bob Stack's big interest at the Palladium is Connie Haines, who sings with the band. Alice Faye is Carmen Miranda's greatest admirer. She plays her records constantly on the set.

The house of Murphy addicts never recognize Lana Turner when she walks in with Tony Martin. She wears her hair in a different way every night. Jackie Coogan, not discouraged by his rebuff from Canadian flying authorities when he wanted to enlist, is going to start a flying school.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Dec. 2.

I've heard people say time and time again, "I'd love to give, if I could only find a cause to put my heart into." Well, you need search no more. I've found it for you. It's the California Junior Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Peter Meremblum, who's professor of music at U. S. C., and teaches violin on the side. I'd heard about these children, but last Saturday morning my friend Ida Koverman picked me up and took me to a public park which I didn't know existed. You go up a little alley between two gas stations off Santa Monica boulevard at Vista. There I saw such youthful enthusiasm and heard some of the sweetest strains of music that have ever come to these old ears. It's remarkable what these youngsters do.

HOPPER

—Some of them don't even own their instruments, and they come from Santa Barbara, Ventura and Sierra Madre.

The concert pianist, little Jackie Horner, aged seven, has the authority of a veteran. She's been signed up by Metro, and if she isn't a sensation, I'll miss my guess. Meremblum is a wonder—not only gives all his services free, but helps buy musical instruments. I'm wondering how many other cities have similar organizations. We should be so grateful that we live in a country where we can give our children violins instead of guns to shoulder.

Cecil B. DeMille has upped the budget for ideas. While making "Union Pacific" he gave away Jefferson nickels for any ideas that would help the picture. Now that he's about ready to "Reap the Wild Wind," he's bought up practically the entire issue of the new Virginia Dare-Sir Walter Raleigh 50 cent piece, and will hand those out only if the idea is worth 50 cent or more.

Virginia Gilmore is finding out that working in two pictures at once—she's doing "Western Union" and "Tall, Dark, and Handsome"—is more work than play. And she goes from gingham in one to ermine and sables in the other. "At least," she says, "I have fun nestling in the sable, even if it doesn't belong to me."

Now that they're going to do Fontaine Fox's "Terrible Tempered Mr. Bang" into a picture how about giving it to Edgar Kennedy?

Director Fritz Lang, after taking a ride around our U. C. L. A. campus, swears he saw a couple of collegians riding in a luggage-laden jalloppy which had this sign: "Two Darned Good Half-Backs Li Search of Hire Education."

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Dec. 2.

ONE OF THE MOST practical and effective steps to be taken in furtherance of Pan-American relations now is in the process of consummation. Representatives of the various South American countries will be invited to come to Washington for a training course given by J. Edgar Hoover's G-men. This will help unify a drive against foreign agents, in addition to the good-will gesture of furnishing to South American countries the most modern methods of combating crime . . . Hoover's men also have surveyed the 1,300 manufacturing plants used for the national defense program and made recommendations for safeguarding them against saboteurs and blue-print robberies. One of the plants had the combination numbers chalked on the safe door.

A NEW YORK mystery woman will enter the Senate's wire-tapping investigation this week. The evidence she will furnish to Senator Stewart is expected to result in citations for contempt of court and indictments for perjury . . . John L. Lewis rushed from the C. I. O. convention in Atlantic City to his home in Alexandria, Va., on Thursday—to celebrate a Republican Thanksgiving dinner . . . Esmond Romilly, nephew of Winston Churchill and who married Unity-Mitford's sister, sold the barroom he owned and went to Canada to enlist in the air force. He was rejected because of an ear operation he once had had . . . Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black plays tennis in his blue serge suit.

PHIL HARRINGTON, traction engineer for the city of Chicago, went to Washington to try and secure an RFC loan for the program under his supervision . . . After a long conference with the RFC officials, Harrington emerged, sighed—and drove to Union Terminal to get the train back to Chicago. One of his friends, who saw him at the station, heard of Harrington's RFC conference. "Phil," he asked, "have you still got your gold fillings?" . . . Harrington, who had been too busy to visit a dentist for repairs, replied: "Yes. Here they are," and took from his pocket the piece of paper in which two gold fillings were wrapped.

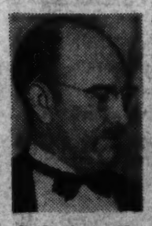
FRANK TINNEY, who died late last week, was one of the most talented entertainers ever to come to Broadway. When his star had faded he returned to his Philadelphia home to live with the memories of how he wowed 'em at the Palace, before the bottle he was hitting exploded all his dreams . . . A few years ago he convinced a theatrical agent that he was done with drinking and was ready to resume his broken career. After a four-week test, during which Tinney abstained completely, the agent went to Bill Hardy, proprietor of the Gay '90's Cafe, and induced him to hire Frank Tinney. "Come with me to Philadelphia," the agent invited, "and you'll see for yourself—Tinney is through drinking." Hardy agreed, went to Philadelphia and found Tinney, staggering and almost naked. He had hocked his clothes for a drink.

DURING THE "Information, Please," broadcast, Leon Henderson was stumped by one of the questions addressed to him. "I'm awfully embarrassed," Henderson announced. "And the man who submitted that question can receive a $50 reward from a certain friend of mine, who wanted to see me embarrassed this way" . . . Despite Clifton Fadiman's probing, Henderson refused to identify the "certain friend" . . . As a matter of fact, that $50 reward was offered by one of Henderson's colleagues on the National Defense Council, a famed industrialist, who, just for once, wanted to see Leon confronted with a problem he couldn't solve. That's why, in addition to the encyclopedia, the question submitted will receive $50 from Bill Knudsen.

EMIL HERMAN, a news cameraman, went to Hyde Park recently to photograph the President. Before entering the room where the President was to pose Herman suddenly was stricken with the memory of the assassination scene in "Foreign Correspondent," the Alfred Hitchcock picture, in which a Dutch premier was shot by a pistol which had been secreted in a camera . . . "I know I'm not suspected," he told the secret service men, "but for everybody's protection, I think you should make sure that everything's all right" . . . And so, while the guards who hadn't requested this watched in fascination, Herman dismanted his camera and then put it together again.

Col. Smith Resigns as Chief Of New Airport Construction

Resignation of Lieut. Col. Sumpter Smith as chairman of the interdepartmental commission in charge of construction of Washington's National Airport was announced last night as agreement was reached on final details of concession contracts expected to return the Federal Government $100,000 a year at Gravelly Point.



COL. SMITH

Col. Smith was summoned to active duty as division air officer with the Alabama National Guard and joined his command at Birmingham yesterday.

At the same time it was disclosed that the new airport will be in shape by December 15 to handle commercial air traffic whenever airliners are unable to land safely at Washington-Hoover Airport. Because of the development of the new airport it will no longer be necessary for airline pilots to use the Army's Bolling Field as an auxiliary airport, 25 months after President Roosevelt watched the first shovelful of earth turned at Gravelly Point November 19, 1938.

"Washington's new airport is within reach of its first objective—the provision of safe landing facilities for the city's growing air transport business," Smith said in a statement. "Gravelly Point's runways will be completed and lighted, and emergency control equipment will be installed by December 15, when it will become an auxiliary area available to the air lines at times when Washington-Hoover Field is unsafe."

All runways at the National Airport have been finished, with the exception of the east-west runway, which has but 500 feet unpaved, with 3,700 feet surfaced and ready for landings. This runway, officials observed, is longer than the east-west runway at Bolling Field and longer than the longest landing strip at Washington - Hoover Airport, which is unsafe for landings when east-west winds blow.

Concrete has been poured for National Airport's big terminal building and the structure will be sufficiently inclosed with glass by the fifteenth for installation of a temporary control tower with communication facilities connecting with Washington-Hoover and Bowling Fields.

Concession contracts covering airline hangar and other space rentals and the restaurant and gasoline concessions, now ready for signing, will pay the Government a gross income of $400,000 a year, officials estimate, out of which an estimated $300,000 in operating expenses will be paid.

Inside three years, officials declared, increased air traffic into Washington should double revenues without adding materially to maintenance costs.

As head of the interdepartmental commission, Col. Smith was responsible for coordinating the functions of 17 Government agencies involved in construction of the airport. He also held the position of special airport adviser to Col. Donald W. Connolly, administrator of civil aeronautics, which paid him his salary and from which his resignation became effective Saturday at midnight.

A special meeting of the interdepartmental commission elected as acting chairman, Fred E. Schnepfe, who represents the Public Works Administration. Col. R. S. Thomas, representative of the Army Corps of Engineers; W. E. Reynolds, of the Public Buildings Administration, and Lieut. Col. Edmund H. Leavey, of the Works Projects Administration, will continue to serve on the commission.

A gala Easter week celebration dedicating the terminal building will mark completion of the airport and facilities now under construction, it is expected.

Britons, Felled Over Albania, Are Lionized

By The Associated Press

Athens, Dec. 2.—Three members of a British bomber struck by Italian antiaircraft shells during a low-dive attack two days ago on an Albanian port returned to their officers' mess tonight and wearily read the official poster about them:

"Missing; feared dead."

Here is their story as told by the squadron leader who piloted the bomber:

"We got a direct hit just as we released our bombs. One fragment ripped a large hole in the port engine cowling, but the motor continued to go. The other quit on us.

"I could still fly her even though the explosion threw the plane on its back.

"I thought we'd pass out from gas fumes before I spotted a small island. The island only had a landing strip of beach which looked about 20 yards wide.

"I gave the mates a chance to jump but they preferred to stand by me. Well, I got her down all right in a belly-landing.

"A peasant nearby on seeing us ran away screaming. Then a man appeared with a rifle and looked tough. We raised our hands and yelled 'English, English.'

"This fellow looked very, very surprised and with a definite American accent, yelled 'are you guys English?'

"By this time several hundred locals had arrived and they looked very dangerous but our American friend talked fast and kept them back."

"Those in the small town showered us with flowers, brought out wine and finally the mayor led me to the balcony of the town hall for a speech. Since it was in English I know they didn't understand it, but every time I said 'Mussolini' and made signs I brought the house down."

The pilot then told how they were bombed by Italian planes and lost a borrowed car, finally found a fishing boat and crossed to the Greek mainland—30 hours on a rough sea.

Migrant Report Tells of Potato Crop Followers

Murray to Testify Today at Hearing On Shift of Workers

The Farm Security Administration's labor division yesterday released a preliminary report on interstate migration of agricultural labor in the Atlantic seaboard area, as the House Migration Investigating Committee turned its attention to the problem of keeping farmers at home.

Today Philip Murray, new president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, will make his first public appearance at the Capitol since his election, as one of the witnesses in a "labor day" hearing on migrant workers.

Murray will follow Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins and Col. Philip B. Fleming, administrator of the wage and hour division of the Labor Department. The hearing will open at 10 a. m., but Murray is not scheduled to testify until 2 p. m.

Transported by Truck

The FSA study of interstate migration showed that potato workers constitute one of the outstanding examples of interstate migration of agricultural workers along the Atlantic seaboard. The workers, the report showed, move successively from northern Florida to South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, and New Jersey before turning south again.

The horde of migrants, chiefly colored men, grows as it goes along from 1,500 in South Carolina to 4,000 in New Jersey. The workers are transported chiefly by truck furnished by contractors.

"Housing for the potato migrants along the Atlantic coast consists mainly of unoccupied box cars," the FSA states, "the floors of packing sheds and grading stations, and unoccupied haylofts, barns, and shacks on the farm.

"Overcrowding is typical, 12 to 15 people often being housed in a shack measuring 12 to 15 feet. Any old, unoccupied house serves as many as 35 workers. . . .

Income Extremely Low

"Under such conditions the health of migrants has not flourished, but it cannot at this time be stated the extent to which migration under such circumstances has been responsible for ill health.

"While there are no tabulations available on earnings and income of all the potato migrants at this time, there are data which show that the annual income of these workers is extremely low, falling into the income level of the poorest sections of the American population."

The FSA report states that other migrations of a more local character in the South involve larger numbers than the potato crops and illustrate "the general impoverishment of agriculture in the South and a long-time trend in certain areas of the South Atlantic States leading to the displacement of Negroes on the farm."

One of the witnesses before the Tolan committee yesterday was Rudolph M. Evans, administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, who explained what the AAA is doing to keep the farmers at home.

Evans Answers Charges

Evans said that it had been charged that AAA payments "have made big landlords so prosperous that they buy up more acreage and more tractors, thus driving owners, tenants and workers off the farm." The trends toward mechanized large-scale farming began before AAA, Evans said, and doubtless would continue if the farm benefit program were continued.

"Nothing is to be gained by complaining about machines or attempting to stop their use," he said. "Our assignment is rather to use machines for the creation of more income and more wealth for all of the people."

The committee also heard H. R. Tolley, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics; Prof. Paul S. Taylor, department of economics, University of California; Dr. Walter S. Packard, consultant of Agriculture Department, Berkeley, Calif., and a half dozen migrant workers, chiefly from Maryland and Virginia.

Mrs. Ursula King Dies at 83; Rites Will Be Tomorrow

Mrs. Ursula M. King, 83, lifelong resident of the Damascus neighborhood, died yesterday at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Ira L. Jones, near Damascus. She was the widow of Rufus K. King.

The funeral will take place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jones at 2 p. m. tomorrow. Burial will be in the cemetery at Damascus. The Rev. J. E. Benson, pastor of the Damascus Methodist Church; the Rev. Raymond Hunter Brown, of Pikesville, Md., formerly pastor of the Damascus Church, and the Rev. Stephen Galley, pastor of Montgomery Chapel, Clagettsville, Md., will conduct the service.

Mrs. King is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Ethel Burdette, of Browningsville, and Mrs. Jones; two sons, Genos King, Damascus, and Fillmore C. King, Etchison, Md.; a brother, E. Dorsey King, of Cedar Grove, Md., and two sisters, Mrs. Mary E. Lawson, Woodfield, Md., and Mrs. Altie Beall, Lewisdale, Md.

John J. George, Confederate Army Veteran, Dies

John J. George, 94, a Confederate veteran who witnessed the fall of Richmond, died yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. James D. Risdon, 1373 Quincy Street Northwest.

Mr. George, who was born in Fredericksburg, Va., enlisted in the cause of the Confederacy when he was 17. Fifty-two years ago he came to Washington, where he lived since, working as a painter and general contractor.

He is survived by two sons, John M. George, Arlington, Va., and Fayette J. George, Washington, besides Mrs. Risdon.

Funeral services will be at 1:30 p. m. tomorrow at the Hines chapel, 2301 Fourteenth Street Northwest. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Dr. Heinrich Simon lectures Monday night on "The Mystery of Musical Creation," using Beethoven's "Pathetique" Sonata as illustrative material.

Approaching a subject of incalculable importance by way of one of its greatest manifestations, Dr. Heinrich Simon began a series of three lectures on "The Mystery of Musical Creation" last evening at 1741 K Street. Beethoven is the composer who, beyond all others, illustrates in music the effects of the creative faculty upon spiritual development.

Ray C. B. Brown

and it is upon three of Beethoven's piano sonatas that Dr. Simon pivots his discussions. His first consideration fell upon the eighth sonata in C minor, which the composer himself designated "Pathetique." From this Opus 13, the talks will proceed to the F minor sonata, Op. 57, and the E minor sonata, Op. 90.

Beethoven was 27 when he wrote the "Pathetique" sonata, which belongs in the first of the three "periods" into which some musicologists classify his works. It is such impassioned music as youth writes, and expresses the tragic aspects of life as the young feel them when tragedy still has a certain glamour and exaltation. The darker shadows of pessimism have not yet dimmed the glow of romance and retarded the urgencies of adventure.

Dr. Simon analyzed the sonata as the development of germinal ideas. He spoke of its formal resemblance to a sonata by Clementi, but did not mention its striking likeness to Dussek's C minor sonata composed five years before. He pointed out in the so-called introduction, which he believes to be the core of the work, the themes which are later modified in the slow movement and the rondo. His exposition of these relations was able and convincing, and he demonstrated the role which the subconscious mind of genius played in the creation of themes capable of significant treatment.

To throw some light on the inexplicable mystery of musical creation, Dr. Simon used the apt and homely illustration of cooking. A recipe carefully followed does not necessarily result in a dish fit for a gourmet, but an instinctive cook unconsciously alters the ingredients and unfailingly succeeds. It was what Beethoven did with the formulas of his predecessors that proved his instinctive musicianship.

No better choice of a composer could have been made by Dr. Simon for the illustration of his thesis. Bach, whose seriousness and maturity of mind reminds one of Beethoven, smothered his spirituality eventually in excess of technique. Mozart and Schubert were cut off by death before their development was complete. Wagner expended his fevers of passion until he had nothing but ineffectual longings to express in "Parsifal." Beethoven's development was continuous to the end because his spiritual resources held the possibility of indefinite growth.

Inauguration Rites to Cost About $150,000

President Roosevelt's third inauguration will cost more than his second with a budget probably slightly in excess of $150,000, Joseph E. Davies, inaugural chairman, declared yesterday.

Although every effort will be made to keep ceremonies simple, Davies pointed out that lumber and other items necessary for the celebration are more expensive than they were in 1936, when the inaugural committee spent between $140,000 and $150,000.

The size of the budget, Davies said, will be decided by the inaugural finance committee, whose chairman is Robert V. Fleming, chairman of the board and president of the Riggs National Bank.

Following a meeting of the inaugural committee in the offices of Commissioner John Russell Young in the District Building, Davies again emphasized the Nation-wide aspects of the celebration.

The Nation's radio networks, Davies indicated, will be widely used to give the American public a part in the inauguration. The methods to be employed, he said, will be worked out by a committee on national participation of which Dorothy Thompson, Washington Post columnist, is chairman. Miss Thompson conferred with Davies at the State Department on preliminary arrangements.

The inaugural committee yesterday partially completed its organization, with headquarters to be set up in the District Building today when Davies will name an assistant chairman who will be in charge of the office.

Mrs. Mary Holmes, widow of George R. Holmes, head of the International News Service Washington Bureau, was named committee secretary. Mrs. Arthur Condon, only woman delegate from the District to the Democratic National Convention, was appointed assistant secretary. Former Gov. Max Gardner, of North Carolina, will head the governors' reception committee.

A "guaranty fund" to finance operations of the committee will be raised by public subscription, Davies said. If revenues derived from other sources, such as sale of seats for the parade, exceed the guarantee, contributors will be repaid in proportion to the amount of their contribution, a committee statement stated. Any surplus over the total of public subscriptions will be given the Community Chest.

"In handling of these funds, a careful program of fiscal procedure has been worked out under which all matters relating to finance—either concerning receipts or expenditures—must be submitted to the budget and audit committee," the statement added.

Geographic Society Honors Photo Chiefs

Franklin L. Fisher, chief of the illustrations division of the National Geographic Society, and Charles Martin, chief of the society's photographic laboratories, were honored at a banquet last night on completion of 25 years of service.

Editors, officers and staff members of the National Geographic Society, members of the board of governors of the Chevy Chase Club, and friends from Washington, Philadelphia and New York attended the dinner at the Chevy Chase Club.

Under Fisher's direction photographers have been sent far from the beaten paths of civilization to bring back views of remote scenes. Both Fisher and Martin were presented certificates signed by associates on the Geographic staff.

Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the society and editor of the National Geographic Magazine, paid tribute to the work of the two men. Other speakers included Dr. John Oliver La Gorce and Dr. George Hutchison.

Martin, the first photographer employed by the society, is well known for his photographs of the Philippines taken 25 years ago, as well as for his later field work. In recent years he had perfected new methods of color photography.

Fisher, a former New York news photographer, founded the Harris and Ewing News Photograph Service here. He is a lieutenant commander in the Navy's volunteer reserve, a member of the U. S. Naval Institute, the National Press, Cosmos Clubs and the Chevy Chase and the Elmira (N. Y.) Golf and Country Clubs.

Fire Breaks Out In Brush Near Naval Magazine

Fire broke out near the naval magazine at Bellevue, D. C., and in a brick building at the Navy Yard yesterday, but District firemen quickly extinguished them.

Fanned by a high wind, flames swept through brush about a quarter of a mile from the arsenal. The fire was discovered by a guard at 2:30 p. m. and while firemen were putting it out, police picked up for questioning two small colored boys. Officers said they lighted the brush during their play.

Fire apparatus was sent to the Navy Yard shortly after noon when workmen saw smoke curling up from the floor of Building 101 which is being vacated by the Bureau of Construction and Repair. The blaze, believed to have been started by a short-circuit, caused slight damage.

Contract Bridge

A Turkish gentleman, Haluk Eratak, played today's hand expertly to win a doubtful four-heart contract during a brief but enforced recess from his official duties, passed in a London "underground"—subway to you. The hand was reported by the British bridge editors who are still presenting the latest developments of the game to an enthusiastic audience.

With three tricks to lose in side suits, he could not afford to give up a trump trick, and the neat way in which our Turkish friend managed to outflank four trumps on his left, including the king, is praiseworthy. It required careful planning and timing to put his right-hand adversary in the lead at the psychological moment to inflict the coup de grace upon his partner. Here is how Mr. Eratak developed the play:

West led the king of clubs, and optimistically continued with the queen and ace, declarer ruffing the third round. The eight and ten of trumps were successfully finessed. East showing out on the latter. Declarer then cashed his three spade honors, tossing a diamond on dummy's third spade. He cashed the ace and king of diamonds and threw East into the lead with another diamond.

This was the situation:

	♠ None ♡ A ◇ 9 ♣ None
♠ None ♡ K6 ◇ None ♣ None	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH	♠ 10 ♡ None ◇ None ♣ 6
	♠ None ♡ QJ ◇ None ♣ None

Mr. Eratak had maneuvered his adversary out of winning the heart king. On East's lead of the club or the spade, declarer would trump with the queen or jack; if West overtrumped his king would be killed by the ace; if West undertrumped, he only forestalled the inevitable capture of his honor, as the ace would win the next trick.

Radio Counsel Challenges FCC Authority

Lawyer for Networks Calls Operational Regulations Illegal

By James D. Secrest

Counsel for the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System yesterday challenged the authority of the Federal Communications Commission to enact rules regulating their operations as a two-day hearing opened on the proposed FCC monopoly report.

At the same time, spokesmen for the Independent Radio Network Affiliates, Inc., told the commission that they are satisfied with the present arrangements between networks and independent stations and don't want the FCC to come to their aid with curbs on the chains.

Today the Mutual Broadcasting System, which has sided with the FCC in some of its findings and is urging regulation to bar some of the practices of N. B. C. and C. B. S., will be heard.

Telford Taylor, general counsel of the FCC, hinted that legislative recommendations may be made to Congress if present authority to regulate netwarks is found lacking.

There were rumors in broadcasting circles, meanwhile, that President Roosevelt will make another recommendation to Congress early next year, proposing absorption of the FCC's radio powers by the Department of Commerce.

The President two years ago recommended a drastic revision of the Communications Act and the overhauling of the seven-man bipartisan regulatory body. Subsequently, Chairman Wheeler of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee introduced a bill to scrap the FCC and to set up a three-man agency in its stead.

The principal targets of attack at the hearing were the 1,300-page monopoly report, drafted by a three-man committee, but not acted upon by the full commission, and the "suggested" network regulations, released last Thursday.

These regulations, if adopted, would curb severely the ownership of stations by networks and their control over independent affiliates.

John J. Burns, counsel for C. B. S., said that "the Federal Communications Commission can regulate only the physical aspects of broadcasting."

Burns added that he saw in one of the "suggested" rules an effort of the commission "to smuggle in the regulation of advertising rates" of broadcasting stations.

Phillip J. Hennessey, attorney for N. B. C., said Congress did not confer on the FCC authority to enforce the antitrust acts against broadcasters.

"Should the commission consider the monopolistic element in granting licenses?" asked James L. Fly, chairman of the FCC.

"It should not," replied Hennessey.

Paul Segal, as attorney for the Independent Radio Network Affiliates, said that his group is opposed to all of the suggested regulations on the ground they are "undesirable rather than illegal."

He argued that the affiliates did not desire to see networks hamstrung and he predicted that if the regulations were adopted that they would discourage the formation of new chains rather than provide greater competition.

Samuel Rosenbaum, president of the organization, said the affiliates now are able to bargain among the three major networks to their advantage.

Commissioner Frederick I. Thompson, a member of the monopoly committee, cited the inability of stations affiliated with N. B. C. and C. B. S. to broadcast the World Series games, under contract with M. B. S., because of the exclusive control exercised by the networks over the affiliate's time.

Fly asked if provisions could not be written into contracts to permit waiver of network control for such special broadcasts. Burns, explaining that he could not bind C. B. S. to any promise, suggested that the matter could be handled more advantageously by cooperation of all three networks.

District Expects To Battle Tonight On 'Cold Front'

Colder temperatures and cloudy skies are forecast for the District today, and a "cold front," moving in from the northwest, is likely to bring sub-freezing temperatures here by nightfall, the Weather Bureau said.

Minimum temperature recorded yesterday was 31 degrees at 5 a. m., and maximum was 45 at 3:30 p. m.

The "cold front" expected here, now sweeping East from the Rocky Mountains, brought temperatures in the middle west to the winter's low yesterday, and snow flurries and 20-degree temperatures were expected in New York late last night.

'Anti-Blitzkriegers'—

Not the least of lessons taught by the Germans in their blitzkrieg through Belgium, Holland and France was the need for some weapon of terrific fire power and high mobility to blast tanks in their tracks. Already a start has been made toward development of this weapon in the organization of three antitank battalions in the United States Army.

Yesterday, at Fort George G. Meade, Md., 10 citizen soldiers from the District area were among 106 selectees assigned to a year's training in one of these units, the Ninety-third Antitank Battalion. After a brief talk by Lieut. Col. Isaac Gill, jr., battalion commander, they were told off into companies. The District recruits all went to Company A, commanded by Capt. Howard R. Johnson.

These men, first from the District to be assigned to combat organizations, were immediately taken in hand by the battalion's non-commissioned officers and its seasoned soldiers and initiated into the mysteries of antitank fighting. After a two-week period of basic training, they will be assigned to gun crews, to driving the light prime movers and to other specialties.

They will learn to handle and fire with accuracy the Garand semiautomatic rifle and the Colt automatic pistol. They will learn to trundle into position and to fire with amazing speed the 900-pound, 37 millimeter antitank gun, a weapon specially designed to fire a heavy projectile through the armor of modern tanks. They are the latest members of the Army's newest arm.

2. CAPT. JOHNSON shows Privates W. D. Feldman, Joseph Goldsmith and Chester Handler how the 37-millimeter gun is loaded

3. PRIVATE J. C. SWANK, Jr., of Alexandria, tries sighting an antitank gun under tutelage of Corpl. Melvin Austin

4. THE ARMY is particular about appearances, as Private Thomas Whelan quickly learned. He polishes the breechlock of a 37-millimeter gun while Corpl. John Florko stands by to see the job properly done

THE 10 DISTRICT SELECTEES watch a tin-hatted gun's crew of regulars demonstrate how the 900-pound gun is quickly moved with handspikes and prolonges. Capt. Johnson directs the maneuver

Santa Clara Balks, May Not Meet Georgetown

Minnesota Is Voted National Grid Title

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Once upon a time, my chickadees, there were some great big bad Bears and the fact is that they are coming to Washington on Sunday to play the Redskins for the professional football championship of the world. It should be very exciting . . . even at those prices they are charging.

POVICH

We don't have to be clairvoyant to recognize that, mingled among the expectancy of Washington fans, are some very positive misgivings. In fact, only the optimists among 'em are expecting the Redskins to beat the Bears again. The realists don't like the way the Redskins have been playing of late—that 21-7 licking by the Giants and that exceedingly squeaky 13-6 victory over the lowly Eagles the other day.

And it is not exactly reassuring to recall the score by which the Redskins did beat the Bears last month, because that one was 7 to 3, and the Bears had the ball on the Redskins' 1-foot line in the last minute.

Maybe you heard that significant titter in the grandstands on Sunday when, with the Redskins leading the Eagles only 6-0 in the third quarter, the public address system interrupted with an announcement: "At Chicago, score at the half: Bears, 31; Cardinals, 0. Redskins time out." Time out for what—reflection?

The impression is that this week is no time for the Redskins to be taking on any such opposition as the Bears for any such important thing as the league title. The Bears have bounced back from their defeat here with a series of smashing victories and the Redskins seem to have retrogressed horribly. They got themselves licked by two clubs they had beaten previously—the Dodgers and the Giants—and against the Eagles the other day the best thing that happened to the Redskins was the final whistle which finally put a stop to the Eagles' passes when the Redskins were having a horrible time doing same.

But wait a minute. Let's examine the complete picture of Redskins vs. Bears and see if it is actually as dark for the Redskins as it appears to be. Somehow we don't think it is. Anyway, let's look.

The fact is that Bears couldn't score a touchdown against the Redskins in their last game and as early as the first quarter settled for a field goal at one point. The Redskins stopped what is the league's best running game, and the Bears are not noted as a passing team. They have Sid Luckman, but the Bears are strictly power out of deception. Their case history in the league contains little reference to Bear touchdowns by air.

We may be touching on a sore spot when we bring up pass defense . . . after what happened to the Redskins against the Eagles . . . But the Bears will not be coming into Sunday's game with clean hands as far as pass defense is concerned. It was against the Bears last year that Davey O'Brien originally smashed the record for completed passes with 21. Last month Sammy Baugh completed 11 out of 17 against the Chicago team.

Sunday's is the game when the Redskins will go all out. Ever since beating the Bears and virtually assuring themselves the Eastern Division title, they've been a tight team. Some sort of reaction that set in dulled their keen edge. At their best, they are a debonair sort of ball club that can sashay on a field and begin to take charge immediately with Baugh throwing his passes and Todd and Johnson running the opposition dizzy. But of late the Redskins have been definitely pressing.

They haven't been in their best physical shape, either. Frank Filchock has been virtually useless for two games and Andy Farkas has played only four minutes all season. Baugh has had a sore foot, though you'd never guess it from his 85-yard punt the other day. Sunday is the day when Farkas threatens to pick up some valuable ground for the Redskins and ripen, with the threat of his running, the passing game of Baugh.

The chances are that Coach Ray Flaherty is welcoming this game with the Bears, if we know him. For the first time in nearly a month he will be able to make himself understood to his squad in his lectures. In his own mind, Flaherty doubtless knew that his Redskins would get licked by the Dodgers and Giants, because he knew that he hadn't been able to whip 'em up to the proper competitive pitch by which he lays such great store. Finally, Flaherty has a setup that he can sink his teeth into and a squad that now will be disposed to listen.

The Bears are one team the Redskins won't be underestimating, and Flaherty is in a position to rekindle the team's spark. We remember when the Redskins were a great ball club who could lick anything in the league, including the Bears. Remember?

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Dec. 2.—What interests you today?

BASEBALL?—Jim Farley tells us that his Yankee deal will go through some time this week or early next week, which sounds as if Farley got that needed cash from Southwestern oil men. About $1,500,000 is, or was, needed for Jim's down payment. We don't know of any U. S. figure for whom that welcome mat would be spread more willingly than for Farley. Jim is pleased pink that Clark Griffith, Connie Mack, Tom Yawkey, Walter O. Briggs and other owners with whom he has talked are heartily in favor of his coming into the big leagues.

CONSIDINE

TRACK?—Do you remember Loren Murchison? He was a great sprinter during the Golden Twenties. Made the Olympic teams in 1920 and 1924 and set many records. Today these amazing legs which carried him to glory are virtually gone. Some time ago he was stricken with much the same ailment as snared Lou Gehrig. Like Lou, he has refused to let his trouble get him down. He is still cheerful, still confident of licking his tragedy and still working. He is managing director of the Dorset Hotel in Miami Beach.

Speaking of track, there is another touching story which concerns Greg Rice, world's three-mile champion. Two nights after Rice set the record for that event in the Finnish relief meet his famous old coach at Notre Dame, John Nicholson, died suddenly. It was a deep shock to Rice, who is a sincere and deeply emotional youth. Nicholson had been a father to him, on, and off the campus. But even now Greg, who will get leave of absence from his job as an accountant in South Bend in order to compete in the big indoor meets here and other places this winter, still communes with Nicholson. "I sit down every day and ask myself what Nick would have wanted me to do that day," he recently told his friend, Charley Callahan. "And then I try to follow the advice he seems to give me."

BOXING?—Lou Nova is back in town, itching to prove that his career did not end in the disastrous Galento fight. "Listen," the big intelligent fellow told us at the Dodgers-Giants game Sunday. "I've got enough money, so that I don't have to fight. I've got family connections, too, whereby I could get almost any sort of work. If there was any doubt in my mind that I'm washed up as a fighter I'd be a chump to try to come back. I know I'm hitting harder than I did before Galento, and I know I'm boxing as well as I always did. I think my first match here will be against Pat Comiskey. I hope so."

GOLF?—Golf Magazine's editor, Fanshawe Lindsley, has a fine suggestion that should make some money for charity. He suggests a series of matches between Lawson Little, U. S. open champion, and Dick Chapman, the new amateur champion, who dominated the last U. S. amateur as Jones once did. Such matches, we think, would attract many more persons than a series between any two pros.

Chapman is thinking seriously of making the winter tour. An amateur on the winter tour, these days of pro superiority, is in a position as precarious as a loose chicken strolling through Harlem. But Chapman is an exception. We doubt if any pro could have beaten him in the U. S. amateur. Recently he tied Sam Snead in a tournament at Pinehurst, and should have won. He had two 6's on one of his rounds. He will play in the $10,000 Miami open this month and will get a medal if he wins it. Which isn't out of the question, the way the fellow can bop that rubber nugget.

FOOTBALL?—Here's the way they split up that play-off dough in the National Football League. The Redskins and Bears will play next week in Washington for 60 per cent of the day's gate, which will run more than $65,000. Of that 60 per cent pot the winner takes 60 per cent and the loser 40 per cent. The teams which finished second in each division get 5 per cent each of the original net gate at Washington. This will mean that the respective runners-up, the Dodgers and Packers, will receive individually about $100 for their valiant, but not quite successful, campaigns. Hmmm . . . Must make some of those Brooklyn and Green Bay stars pine for their prosperous old days as amateurs.

Gophers Unanimous Choice; Texas Aggies Drop to Sixth After 7-0 Upset by Texas

By Bill Boni
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Dec. 2.—Minnesota's Golden Gophers were voted the No. 1 college football team of 1940 today in the final Associated Press ranking poll of the season.

At the top of the list for the three preceding weeks, the Western Conference champions were named first by 65 and second by 55 of the 133 experts throughout the country who took part in the deciding vote. In all the Gophers polled 1,244 points as they took the place won a year ago by Texas A. and M.

The Aggies, who had been runners-up, dropped down to sixth place as a result of their 7-0 defeat by Texas, their only loss of the year. Second place went to Stanford, the West's unbeaten and untied Rose Bowl candidate; third to Michigan, beaten only by Minnesota; fourth to Tennessee, which finished second in 1939 and for the third straight year completed its regular schedule without loss or tie, and fifth to Boston College, No. 1 Eastern team which will play Tennessee in the New Orleans Sugar Bowl on New Year's Day.

Nebraska Is Seventh

The last four places went to Nebraska's Big Six champions, another team whipped only by Minnesota and now booked to play Stanford in the Rose Bowl; Northwestern, which lost to Minnesota and Michigan; unbeaten but once tied Mississippi State, the Southeastern Conference entry in Miami's Orange Bowl, and Washington pre-season favorite, but end-of-season runner-up in the Coast Conference race.

Three other teams that have post-season engagements finished in the second division. Santa Clara and Georgetown, which will meet at Los Angeles on Christmas Day, placed eleventh and thirteenth, respectively, while Fordham, which will go to the Cotton Bowl, rated twelfth.

Minnesota gained its rank by coming through probably the season's toughest schedule. The Gophers opened by licking Washington, the Huskies afterward losing only to Stanford; handed Nebraska and then Michigan their only trimmings of the season, and also knocked off Ohio State, Iowa, Northwestern, Purdue and Wisconsin.

Only Two Reporters

A comparison of the 1939 and 1940 first tens gives ample proof of the roller-coaster fluctuations of football fortune. Only Texas A. and M. and Tennessee survive of last year's list.

The most remarkable rise, of course, was Stanford's. Good enough this year to be ranked first by 44 voters on the final ballots, the Indians a year ago were in the Coast Conference cellar. That spot for 1940 went to U. C. L. A., which only 12 months ago was rated seventh in the season's-end standings.

The final standing (points figured on 10-9-8-7-6, etc., basis, first-place votes in parentheses):

1. Minnesota	(65)	1,244
2. Stanford	(44)	1,125
3. Michigan	(5)	914
4. Tennessee	(10)	885
5. Boston College	(7)	798
6. Texas A. and M.	(1)	728
7. Nebraska		514
8. Northwestern		323
9. Mississippi State	(1)	233½
10. Washington		210¼

Godoy Pounds Musto, Takes Easy Victory

Cleveland, Dec. 2 (AP).—Rugged Arturo Godoy, fighting desperately in his drive for another bout with Champion Joe Louis, battered and pounded Tony Musto for ten rounds tonight, but the tough Chicagoan refused to give in and the South American had to be content with a decision.

Musto was hanging on for most of the last three rounds, but gamely fought back. Godoy dropped him for a three count in the fifth for the only official knockdown.

Godoy, who lost a 15-round decision to Louis and was kayoed in the eighth round of a return engagement, was in command tonight all the way and lost only one round—the seventh. That one was taken from him by Referee Tony Le Branche for low blows.

Musto gained even breaks in the first round, as Godoy half slipped to one knee after a hard left, and the sixth, when he rallied briefly with some vicious infighting.

The Chilean opened Musto's nose with a jolting left in the fourth round and the loser bled badly throughout the rest of the mauling match.

Godoy worked on Musto's body with jolting rights and then switched his attack to the head as the Chicagoan weakened.

Pat Comiskey, New Jersey battler, tonight knocked out Don Siegel, of Detroit, former Michigan football player, in the first round of their bout.

Comiskey scored a knockdown for the count of nine immediately after the fight started.

Siegel got up, but appeared to be out on his feet and in a matter of seconds Comiskey had him down for the final count. Siegel landed no more than three blows, all lefts, before Comiskey had him reeling around the ring. The kayo came in 1 minute 46 seconds.

Broncs Want Better Offer For Expenses

New Promoter Group Said to Be Interested; Definite Decision Is Expected Today

Santa Clara last night withdrew from the proposed Christmas Day charity game with Georgetown on the West Coast because of the "inability of the British War Relief Fund to assume financial responsibilities of the game."

But later reports from the Coast said another group of promoters were working on the game and there was still a "strong possibility that it can be played."

A spokesman for the new group said: "We will know tomorrow."

Miami Speaks

Meantime latest advices from Miami indicate that Georgetown has an inside track on the assignment to meet Mississippi State in the Orange Bowl on New Year's day.

A person close to the Orange Bowl committee wired The Post as follows:

"Definite decision will be made Tuesday afternoon. Georgetown chances look good. It's between G. U. and Texas Aggies."

Georgetown officials refused to elaborate on the earlier report that the Santa Clara game was off. A representative stated: "That's the way things stand."

Calls Game Off

Sam Dunne, director of athletics at Santa Clara, made the announcement that the proposed game with Georgetown would not be played.

Dunne said that Santa Clara felt it would entail "too great a risk" to consider the game further because the British War Relief Fund Committee, which was to sponsor the post-season affair, could not guarantee expenses.

Cause of the misunderstanding between Santa Clara and the British War Relief Fund was said to be a difference of $5,000 in the expenses demanded by the Broncos. Santa Clara is understood to have insisted on no less than $15,000, while Alan Mowbray, chairman of the British War Relief Committee, would go no higher than $10,000.

The second group of promoters was not identified but it was understood to be prepared to offer guarantees and expenses to both teams.

Hoyas Still Idle

The Georgetown squad has not resumed practice since defeating George Washington to complete its season with a record of eight victories and one defeat, a 19-18 loss to Boston College.

The Hilltop has received a "feeler" from the Orange Bowl authorities and it is believed the Hoyas will make no further commitments until the other selection is made for that game.

If it came to a choice of going to the West Coast or to Miami, it is not definitely known what Georgetown would do, but Gabriel Murphy, graduate manager of athletics, said last week that the Coast trip was preferred. JACK MUNHALL.

Salica Stops Montana in 3d To Keep Title

By the Associated Press

Toronto, Dec. 2.—Champion Lou Salica, of New York, scored a technical knockout over Small Montana, former flyweight champion, in the third round tonight to defend successfully his world bantamweight boxing championship. Salica weighed 118 pounds and Montana 114.

Salica, pounding the Filipino fighter from San Francisco, with a merciless body attack, floored his rival nine times before the referee stopped the bout afte 1½ minutes of the third round. Montana was battered to the canvas three times in the first round, four times in the second, and four in the third.

It was Salica's first defense of the title he won by defeating Georgie Pace, of Cleveland, last September.

Referee Bill Burke reported after the fight that Montana complained that his left ribs were fractured and arrangements were made for an X-ray examination.

During the brief spells the Filipino was on his feet, he outboxed the champion. His shiftiness made Salica miss many blows to the head. He didn't miss his rib-bending body punches, however, and Montana had no defense against them.

Montana took a count of six on the first knockdown, from which he never recovered. He was down for counts of three and five before the bell gave him a breathing spell. The second round knockdowns came in rapid succession but never went beyond the count of six.

Each time he got up and went into a clinch, Montana made futile efforts to protect his left side. Sometimes he turned almost completely around and a few of Salica's blows landed on his spine.

Hank Greenberg, 'Most Valuable,' Close to U.S. Army

Detroit, Dec. 2 (AP).—Big Hank Greenberg, Detroit Tiger outfielder voted the most valuable player in the American League last season, may be in the Army and not on the diamond by next summer.

Greenberg has local order No. 621 in Wayne County Selective Service Board No. 23. The board has been ordered to furnish 400 men for service by June 30.

One draft official, who refused to be quoted by name, declared today: "Board No. 23 will yield a high percentage of men eligible for general military service because it includes a big percentage of transient single men in the downtown area. But it would appear doubtful that the board could get 400 such single men within the first 600 numbers. So it seems possible that Mr. Greenberg might be called by next June 30."

Greenberg, a strapping 210-pound bachelor who is 6 feet 4 inches tall, was credited with an important role in thes uccess of the pennant winning Detroit Club this season.

Gabby Hartnett Signs As Giant Player-Coach

Former Cub Manager Given One Year Contract by New York; Acquisition Will Not Affect Present Managerial Set-up

By the Associated Press

Atlanta, Dec. 2.—The New York Giants announced today that Leo (Gabby) Hartnett, former manager of the Chicago Cubs, had been hired as a player-coach for the 1941 season.

Announcement was made by Horace Stoneham, president of the Giants, shortly after the Brooklyn Dodgers had announced the signing of John (Red) Corriden as a coach.

Hartnett and Corriden served together with the Cubs until let out last month to make room for Jimmy Wilson as the new manager.

Stoneham said that Hartnett would be used in pinch-hitting roles and for this reason would be kept on the active player list.

No Change in Set-up

Stoneham said the hiring of Hartnett would not affect the status of the Giants' other coaches, Travis Jackson and Frank Snyder.

Hartnett had been with the Cubs ever since he entered the major leagues in 1922, and set an all-time record by catching 100 or more games per season for 12 years, 8 of them consecutively.

Last season Hartnett appeared in only 37 games and batted .262.

Previously, he had set a record for the most games caught by a catcher at 1,737. He led the National League catchers in fielding percentage for seven years and set a major and National League record for the most consecutive chances

Harry Jeffra 10-Round Decision Over Escobar

Baltimore, Dec. 2 (AP).—Harry Jeffra, recognized in Maryland and New York as the featherweight champion, won an easy ten-round victory tonight over Sixto Escobar, former bantamweight titleholder. Jeffra weighed 126½ and Escobar 127. It was a nontitle bout.

Jeffra, a Baltimorean, was the aggressor all the way and took every round from the Puerto Rican.

Dr. Dickinson Says Gophers Are No. 1 Team

By the Associated Press

Champaign, Ill., Dec. 2.—Minnesota's Gophers, the undefeated and untied Western Conference champions, were ranked the Nation's No. 1 team today in the 1940 Dickinson football ratings issued by Dr. Frank G. Dickinson, of the University of Illinois.

Minnesota thus received permanent possession of the Rockne Memorial Trophy, having won it by its Dickinson ratings in 1934, 1936 and this year. Dr. Dickinson, who said this season's rating was his last, declared that the Gophers also had won permanent possession of the trophy on a best 10-year record basis.

Michigan, though defeated by Minnesota, 7-6, was placed second because of the caliber of its schedule. Stanford's undefeated and untied Rose Bowl host, and Tennessee and Texas A. and M., were next on the list.

Pennsylvania was the only Eastern team to make the ratings. Southern Methodist was placed eighth, but Dr. Dickinson said that if the Mustangs lost to Rice next Saturday, Boston College would take over the eleventh position.

THE RATINGS

Pete Lello Beats Morris Parker

Newark, N. J., Dec. 2 (AP).—Pete Lello, 134½, of Chicago, punched too hard for Morris Parker, 129, Newark Negro, and gained a technical knockout after 41 seconds of the final session of a scheduled eight-rounder tonight before a sell-out crowd of 3,500 at Laurel Garden.

Vinnie Vines, 149, Schenectady, N. Y., turned in a startling upset by knocking out Billy White, 148, Baltimore Negro, in 2:20 of the first heat of another scheduled eight. It was White's first defeat in 16 New Jersey bouts.

Tom Harmon Says:

By Bob Considine

This is the second of a series of seven unique interviews in which Tommy Harmon, of Michigan, America's gridiron hero of 1940, relates behind-the-scenes anecdotes about his most exciting games of the season.

That Tommy Harmon, who was never much shakes as a high school player around Gary, Ind., would be the man to break Red Grange's Western Conference scoring record became apparent in Harmon's games against Michigan State and Harvard, Michigan's second and third games of the 1940 season.

Tommy scored all the points in Michigan's 21-14 victory over State and 20 points in Michigan's 26-0 victory over Harvard. He dominated nearly every play, to the yells of a combined audience of close to 100,000 spectators. He punted, kicked extra points, passed and blocked, as well as ran the ball. There was nothing to stop him except something that happened at Harvard.

"Pardon Me"

"I thought I heard the Harvard boys saying something each time one of them hit me and dragged me down." Tommy recollected during my interview with him. "They were helping me up each time, too, which was nice. But what they were saying, after they smacked me down was what interested me. Finally I shifted my helmet away from my ear a little and found they were saying 'Pardon me' while we were going

College Football Attendance Up 2¼ Percent During 1940

Ohio State Proves Best At Gate

5 Buckeye Games at HomeDraw 301,931; Penn Shows Rise; Yale Is Far Off

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 2.—With increases in the Midwest, East and Far West more than offsetting losses in other sections of the country, college football attendance for 1940 rose 2¼ per cent over last year.

An Associated Press survey today of 64 representative schools from every section of the county showed a total attendance of 7,597,342 for 330 games this year. In 1939, 69 schools, playing 317 games, reported an attendance of 7,414,966. The game average, however, this year was slightly under 1939, the figures being 23,391 for 1939 and 22,788 for 1940.

Ohio State Leads

The Midwest, despite consistent bad weather in sections of the Big Six Conference territory, showed the largest gain with an increase of 11 per cent. Although having a bad season, Ohio State reported the largest attendance with 301,931 for five games, an increase of more than 51,000 over 1939. Northwestern, Wisconsin, Detroit and Illinois, each playing the same number of home games last year, also showed substantial increases but oddly enough Minnesota, Western Conference champions, fell off some 15,000.

The East, fortified by Penn's jump from 331,000 to 407,135, Boston College's increase of 23,000, a boost of nearly 40,000 at Villanova and 16,000 at Cornell, reported a rise of 4 per cent. Navy's attendance showed an increase of 102,000, but the Army's figures dropped off that match because the clash between the service teams was the Middies' home game this year.

Princeton was the only member of the Big Three to show an increase. Yale, reflecting one of the worst seasons in years, dropped down to 185,000 for six games, while Harvard's figures declined from 183,000 to 143,000.

The Far West, with Southern California drawing 305,000 and U. C. L. A., 294,777, boosted its attendance 2.4 per cent.

Big Decline in Rockies

The big decline was the Rocky Mountain area, where, on the basis of reports from three representative schools, there was a decline of 8 per cent, Texas, with its traditional game with the Texas Aggies as a drawing card, and Rice were the only schools to show gains in the Southwest, where there was a drop of 1½ per cent.

The South likewise showed a decrease of 1.3 per cent with North Carolina and Louisiana State showing the only sizable gains and Tulane falling off more than 80,000. The Greenies, however, played two less games at home than in 1939.

Following are the comparative attendance records for 1940 and 1939 with number of home games in brackets:

California Soph Back Will Miss Dec. 28 Clash

By the Associated Press

Berkeley, Calif., Dec. 2.—Jim Jurkovich, University of California's sophomore halfback star, will not play with the Bears in the last game of the season, a postseason encounter with Georgia Tech at Atlanta, December 28.

Jurkovich, a Fresno boy, was kicked in the head in pre-season practice and, while seemingly recovered from the concussion, had to be taken out of all but two of California's games. He was injured on the second play of the contest with Stanford last Saturday and was removed from the game.

Milo Steinborn Meets Gorvo On Mat Card

Plummer to Face Tommy Rae; Dusek Tangles With Cox

The "Strong Man," meaning Milo Steinborn, will continue his weekly operations at Turner's Arena Thursday night when he meets Whiley Gorvo, former Nevada cowhand, in a special bout on the card featuring Ernie Dusek and Warren Bockwinkle.

Steinborn has captured five straight local bouts, his latest at the expense of Rough Rudy Dusek in a headliner last week.

Gorvo teamed last week with Bockwinkle to defeat the two-man combination of Herbie Freeman and Eddie Newman.

Another bout closed out yesterday finds "Gentleman Lou" Plummer meeting Tommy Rae, popular Bostonian.

In the semiwindup Emil Dusek will take on the Kansas Krasher, Joe Cox.

Irish Take 36 To California

South Bend, Ind., Dec. 2 (AP).—Football Coach Elmer Layden of the University of Notre Dame picked a 36-man squad tonight for Saturday's season-ending game at Southern California.

He said the starting line-up would be the same as in the Northwestern game a week ago last Saturday, which Notre Dame lost.

Reserve Right Halfback Steve Bagarus suffered a leg injury in practice in the fieldhouse today but will make the trip. The Irish will leave by train after a noon drill tomorrow and will work out Thursday and Friday at the University of Arizona in Tucson.

Hagerstown 'Y' Seeks

The Hagerstown Y. M. C. A. basketball team is seeking games with teams in and around Washington. Tom Pappas, of the "Y," is booking the games.

Hovey-King Breaks 2 Records In Georgia Avenue League

A. Hovey-King, Rinaldi & Leemans, was the star of the Georgia Avenue League at Silver Spring, setting two new season records with his 162 high game and walloping 428 set. He had game counts of 162-140-126. Tastee Diner took team game with 595, while Willis Builders counted 1,717 to win set. National Electric Machine leads followed by Hot Shoppes and Willis Builders.

SANITARY

Oliff led the Sanitary Grocery loop last night at Convention Hall with highs of 146-398 with the Sanitary Office boys taking team highs of 603-1,644.

MERCHANTS

Frank Caruso, Atlas Liquors, rolled high game of 141 as Jacobs Southern Dairies, took high set of 384 in the Merchants meet at Convention Hall. The Atlas Liquor lads also won team high counts with 623-1,744.

COLUMBUS

Frank Loux, York Fuel quintet of the Petroleum loop at Columbia, was high man last night with highs of 156-414, to lead his team to tops of 613-1,697. Esso Extra and Wayne Oil Burner are dividing the top honors with Ott's Service Station the runner-up.

ODD FELLOWS

With the Golden Rule quintet still dominating the Brookland mapleways, the Odd Fellows loop started the second half of the season with the leading Golden Rule boys five in front after taking highs for game and set of 603-1,722, respectively. Walter Humphrey, Columbia No. 2, was high game winner with his 153, But Doc Lewis, Mount Pleasant, was best for set with 387.

ICE PALACE

Sue Winkler, Cardinals, took a game count of 123 and set of 326 to lead the other members of the Ice Palace Ladies' League, thereby winning the bouquet of flowers and the hat, weekly prizes given top counters. The Woodpeckers pecked away at the pins until they took team highs with 522 and 1,501, both marks high for the season.

INSURANCE

Hurd, Great American, and Bill Grimes, Ellett & Short, were the best men in the Insurance meet at Penn with the former taking high for game with 157 as the latter won the set honor with 371. American was best team with 598-1,669.

FARM CREDIT

The Audit quintet in the Farm Credit League at Penn Recreation did the big number work for the night, the team taking highs with 565—1,632 as paced by Joe Mulroe's 148 high game and 378 high set.

TAKOMA CHURCH

The Takoma Church lads quickly discovered that Carl Sidell was tops for the night with 150—383 while the Presbyterian No. 1 quintet won team highs with 553—1,601. Catholic No. 1 leads the loop with 23 wins against 10 losses followed by Catholic No. 2 with 20-13, while the Presbyterian No. 1 lads are in third position with 17-16.

KILOWATT

Ed Hodgson, Station Engineering, topped the Kilowatt League with highs of 176 and 397 at Penn Recreation and helped his mates to high team game with a nice 677. The Engineering boys, however, could not be stopped for high set, topping the others with a 1,779 count.

ARROW CAB

Johnny Reed, Gas Line team of the Arrow Cab loop, bowling at Northeast Temple, was the best chauffeur on the drives last night with his highs of 126 and 347 which accelerated his mates to take team highs with 523 and 1,535. Gas Line also won all three games from the Avenue Specials to take over first place with 23-7.

FEDERAL

In the Men's Federal rolling at Arcadia it was Al Seaton, agriculture, who took top game honors for individuals with 147 as Bill Miller, FBI No. 1, G-men rolled a 391 high set and aiding his team to game high count of 840. The GPO lads were best on set, taking a nice 1820 to top the others.

Turner Offers Archibald Arena Bout

$750 Guaranteed Joey to Meet Banks On December 16

The match local fight moguls have been trying to make since the Joey Archibald-Harry Jeffra featherweight fiasco here 13 months ago appeared on the verge of materializing yesterday when Promoter Joe Turner wired Archibald a $750 offer to meet Billy Banks here December 16.

The offer was sent to Al Weill, manager of the former featherweight champion, in New York.

Archibald, whose decision over Jeffra in their title fight was called the great Griffith Stadium holdup, was floored by Banks in a training session for the bout. After Joey later lost hi stitle to Jeffra in a return fight matchmakers began trying to lure him into a battle with the Washington colored fighter.

Banks, a speedy, clever fighter without much sting to his punches, has been winning consistently lately. Turner and Matchmaker Gabe Menendez believe that the two in a headline match will sell out the Fourteenth and W Streets Arena.

The show would inaugurate the opening of the renovated fight palace, modernized and enlarged to seat 3,000 customers.

Cincinnati Gets Golf Tournament

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—The Women's Western Golf Association awarded its 1941 Open championship to the Cincinnati Country Club at Cincinnati today and said that for the first time a cash prize will be awarded the winner in the event she is a professional.

The tournament will be held June 9-14 and the association president, Mrs. Charles B. Willard, of Highland Park, Ill., said all five of the ranking women professionals in the sport "undoubtedly would compete." They are Patty Berg, Mildred (Babe) Didrickson Zaharias, Helen Detweiller, Mrs. Opal S. Hill and Helen Hicks Harb.

Mrs. Willard said a $100 purse would go to the pro winning the event. Mrs. Zaharias won the 1940 championship at the Blue Mound Club in Milwaukee.

Nebraskans Prove Popular Bowl Choice

Coast Is Favorable Toward Huskers As Stanford Foe

By the Associated Press

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 2.—Football forces of the University of Nebraska will find a warm reception when the Cornhuskers move in to play Stanford in the Rose Bowl.

In contrast to certain previous years, when fans and football writers minced no words in expressing displeasure over a selection, the choice of Nebraska apparently was a popular one.

There was evidence of genuine regret in many places because Texas A. and M. missed out, but supporters of the Lone Star State aggregation accepted the Nebraska bid with good grace.

Aggies Lose Out

The hopes for the Texas team took a nose dive after the loss by the Aggies to Texas last week, because it had been known from the start that Stanford preferred inviting a team from some section of the country other than the South or Southwest.

Thus, the rock 'em, sock 'em Cadets had two strikes on them at the outset, and the Texas Longhorns pitched the third. That single Texas touchdown was worth $75,000 to Nebraska.

This will be the first time a Midwest team has been in the Rose Bowl since Notre Dame whipped Stanford in 1925; and the first time Nebraska, or a Big Six champion, has ever been in the Big Saucer.

Popular Choice

"I think the bid to Nebraska is a fine choice. It makes the Rose Bowl a more representative attraction," said Bob Foote, Pasadena sports editor, who has seen almost every Rose Bowl game since 1916.

Over in neighboring Los Angeles—where the boys on occasion have really hopped on a selection not to their liking—all was serene. Sports Editor Paul Zimmerman of the Times received the news with great delight.

Zimmerman began boosting A. and M. stock as far back as last September, but it was no feat for him to praise the Nebraska bid once the Husker movement began rolling. He is a staunch alumnus of Nebraska.

"It's great," wrote George T. Davis, of the Herald-Express, and Al Santoro, of the Los Angeles Examiner, added. "Nebraska has always had a powerful football team and should make a tough foe for Stanford."

Nebraska Students Elated Over Bid

Lincoln, Nebr., Dec. 2 (AP).—University of Nebraska students staged one of the largest and most boisterous rallies in the history of the school today, to show their enthusiasm for the selection of the Cornhuskers to meet Stanford in the Rose Bowl football classic.

All thoughts of school were dismissed and professors readily gave way to the marching, howling throng. The celebration began early and continued several hours. Word of the honor coming to Nebraska arrived late last night.

Nearly 3,000 students assembled in front of a hotel this morning and two of the Huskers' top performers, Backs Herman Rohrig and Vike Francis, had a difficult time weaving through the crowd when called upon to speak.

"This is an honor of a lifetime," Rohrig shouted, and Francis added, "we won't let Husker fans down on New Year's Day."

Williamson Names Vols No. 1 Team

Tennessee Picked Over Stanford, Eagles and Gophers

By Paul B. Williamson
Famed Football Forecaster

The battle for the national football championship goes into the semifinals with the Tennessee Volunteers as the No. 1 team of the country.

Despite their comparatively weak schedule, Maj. Neyland's Vols have shown championship form. They have the power and the class. The second and third strings smothered little Mercer, 49-0, in the season opener. And, in the second game of their schedule, the Volunteers knocked over Duke—our preseason favorite—for the national title, 13-0.

Beat Minor Teams

Chattanooga, one of the best minor teams in the country, was just a 53-to-0 breezer for Tennessee's substitutes. Mighty Alabama bowed, 27 to 12. Florida went under, 14 to 0, and the Tigers of L. S. U., were blanked, 28 to 0. Next for the Volunteers came Southwestern, of Memphis, which later tied Clemson, 12 to 12. But Southwestern was a pushover for Maj. Neyland's boys, 40 to 0. One of the best Virginia teams in years took a 41-to-14 licking and, then last Saturday, ever-dangerous Vanderbilt, went down, 20 to 0, in the mud at Nashville.

On a purely personal basis this rater would have likely to have placed that colorful and fighting Michigan team at the top. But there are two reasons why Michigan could not get that spot. One, they lost to Minnesota, and champions don't lose. And two, Michigan would not defend its title in postseason games.

Undefeated and untied Stanford beat California last week to earn the No. 2 position. Boston College also completed a perfect-record season and took third place. Boston College was better in that Holy Cross game than the score indicates. One Eagles touchdown was called back because of offsides.

Gphers Fourth

Minnesota, idle last week, rides undefeated and untied at No. 4. That's the best the Golden Gophers deserve in the Williamson Ratings because they beat a dry-field playing Michigan in the mud by only one point, and barely skimmed by Northwestern 13-12.

Mississippi State came through for the system to beat Alabama, 13-0, and earn sixth place. Santa Clara also ran true to form to trounce Oklahoma, 33-13, and rate the seventh spot. At No. 8 is Nebraska.

Kimbrough & Co. stumbled after 19 straight victories to bow before Texas, 7-0. They stumbled right on down from No. 1 to No. 9. The Aggies were, and still are, a power in collegiate football. But again, champions don't lose.

C. U. Fighters Start Work; 3 Stars Lost

Knockout Trio, Stant, Bunsa, Turner, Must Be Replaced in '41

Faced with the loss of the "big guns" of boxing at Catholic University, Coach Eddie LaFond yesterday called out his Cardinal squad for the first workout of the season and began casting around for replacements.

Gone are the trio of knockout specialists who carried Catholic University through to its undefeated, untied season last year—the second year without a defeat at Brookland.

Jay Turner, who doubled as a heavy and light-heavyweight; Fred Stant, 1938 national intercollegiate 165-pound champion, and Joe Bunsa, 155-pound captain of the 1939 ring team, are the missing boys LaFond will have to replace if he hopes to make his eleventh year coaching the Cardinals as successful as the first ten.

Reporting yesterday were Julius Stanges, heavyweight who last year was hindered by football injuries; Leo Houck, jr., 175-pounder; Gerry Strang, the 165-pounder from Canada; John Haskins, who'll try to fill Bunsa's shoes; Huck Hughes, welterweight; Leo Gaffney, a newcomer in the 135-pound division; veteran Lenny Bartone, featherweight, and Ted Mandris, last year's 120-pounder.

LaFond in his ten years of coaching C. U. fighters has a record of 40 victories against 8 defeats, and last year in winning five straight they ran their streak to eight without a defeat.

U. S. Table-Tennis Stars Show Here

National Table Tennis Champion Lou Pagliaro and Sol Schiff, a former titleholder, will make their first District appearance since the nationals next Tuesday night in Heurich gym.

Pagliaro, former manager of a table tennis shop here, has not met defeat for more than a year. He has won ten tournaments since that time.

Schiff will meet his successor as champion in the feature match while each will play Doug Cartland and Bernie Grimes, who round out the four visiting stars. Cartland, University of North Carolina alumnus, is ranked seventh nationally and Grimes, Massachusetts State champ, ninth.

Redskin-Bear Game Is Rapid Sell-Out in Rush for Tickets

Fans Failing To Get Seats Disgruntled

Marshall Admits Scalpers Got Some Tickets; 90 Per Cent Sold to D. C. Fans

By Al Haile

The Redskins-Chicago Bears championship game next Sunday became the quickest sell-out in professional football history yesterday, but the details of the three and a half-hour rush for tickets at Griffith Stadium were as involved as they were confused.

Redskin bosses reported that 24,000 tickets were disposed of from the time windows were opened at the ball park at 8:0 a. m. until they were closed at 12 noon.

Reports persisted, however, that considerably less than this number had been placed on sale at the stadium and that a large block of tickets had gotten into the hands of scalpers.

One report stated that only 12,500 seats were sold at the ball park.

35,752 Is Capacity

The Redskin management—up to its neck convincing disgruntled fans who arrive too late at the stadium sale that there were no more tickets to be had—discounted all reports, however, and said that with exception of a few which have been sold but are yet to be called for every of of the 35,752 seats have been taken.

Despite the rumor that several hundred tickets had been carted out of town by scalpers, the 'Skin front office estimated that 90 per cent of the tickets are in the hands of local fans.

Ticket sellers opened windows at the ball park to be greeted by a small band of sleepy-eyed citizens, who had maintained an all-night vigil despite near-freezing weather. By 1 o'clock the crowd had swelled to such proportions in seven long lines that extra details of Metropolitan Police and 20 detectives were called out. When the windows were opened an hour later a howl of protest from late arrivals arose.

$101,000 Gate

The sale insures a net gate of more than $101,000 for the playoff game, 70 per cent of which goes to the Redskin and Bear players and to the second-place teams in each of the National Professional Football League's Eastern and Western division.

Plainclothes detectives, keeping a sharp eye out for known ticket scalpers, also had instructions to keep their eyes open for "amateurs," George Marshall, part owner of the Redskins, said.

Marshall admitted late yesterday, however, that a quantity of tickets undoubtedly had gotten into the hands of scalpers.

"You can hardly expect to keep a certain amount of tickets from reaching these people in such a rush, but I believe we did the best job possible and that the scalpers didn't get away with any more than a negligible few," he stated, adding that persons not holding tickets should not go to the Stadium in the hope of buying from scalpers.

Ticket sellers had orders to sell no more than two tickets to any one fan. Several persons were caught in the act of purchasing tickets at one window and quickly getting into another line for more, but they were warned and ushered out of the ball park by police.

Espey Berated

Hardly two hours after the windows opened, every $3.30 and $4.40 seat had been sold, and only the $2.20 perches in the bleachers and the emergency stands built in front of the bleachers behind the eastern goal posts remained.

Newspaper offices were swamped with calls from irate fans laboring under the mistaken idea that the various sports departments act as subsidiary ticket selling spots.

General Manager Jack Espey said he was besieged by bitter denunciations from fans who finished "out of the money" in the long lines at the Griffith Stadium windows.

"Mr. Bigs" Fail

The rush for tickets had its humorous side in the various stories bandied about at Redskin offices by followers who had to have "just two more tickets" for certain Mr. Bigs and by timid clerks whom "the boss" had ordered them to "get down to that Redskin office and tell them I want two tickets and no conversation."

Conversation will be all the Redskin bosses will be able to provide the remainder of this week, however. In fact, Marshall started the ball rolling yesterday as he surveyed a table loaded down with money orders that had to be returned.

He estimated that $100,000 will be returned to fans before the week is over with accompanying notes saying that Griffith Stadium has no more seats.

The Redskin management today will start concentrating on getting the ball park ready to house the playoff crowd.

Bears Arrive Saturday

The Bears will leave Chicago Friday, arrive Saturday morning and pitch camp in the Mayflower Hotel. They will hold a practice drill Saturday afternoon in the ball park.

While the Bears work, carpenters will be extending the sidelines press box in the stadium's upper tier to include 53 additional seats in section P. With the extension and through the use of the baseball press box, the stands will accommodate but 134 sports writers and reporters, and space must be found for 150, William Abbott, National League publicity director, said here last night.

In addition to the 35,752 cash customers, there will be 1,500 men working the game—ticket collectors, program salesmen, Civilian Conservation Corps workers, venders of hot dogs, peanuts, cold drinks and countless other game employes.

The game, Washington's first league playoff, will be carried to the Nation on 115 radio stations through a Mutual Broadcasting System hookup. Five newsreel companies — Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox, Universal and Pathe—will make the picture record.

P Street Peewees Dress Up for the Football Wars

Proudest of the local sandlot elevens these days is the P Street Peewee team, the center and backfield of which is shown above during a workout. The Peewees have only three helmets, and no shoulder pads or cleats, but by dint of great saving they now own enough bright red jerseys for every member of the team. They may be seen each day under the statue of Gen. Phil Sheridan on Massachusetts Avenue, strenuously going through signals under the guidance of Capt. Leroy Cissel. This group of 80-pounders consists of Center Thomas Keane, 12, and (left to right) Capt. Cissel, 12; Bob Parnell, 14; Billy Patten, 12, and Ned Cox, 11. Any team that thinks it can lick the Peewees may readily get a game by calling young Cissel at Michigan 0616

All-League Honors Voted 3 Redskins

Baugh, Barber and Slivinski Named on United Press Team

By George Kirksey
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Dec. 2.—The greatest collection of football brains, power and speed in the country is represented on the annual United Press all-National League professional team announced today.

The line averages 213 pounds and the backfield 189 pounds. The team can do everything there is to be done with a football, and probably do it better than any eleven men anywhere.

The Washington Redskins, with three men on the first team, led all others and gave the East an edge over the West with seven places. Two members each were supplied by the New York Giants and Brooklyn Dodgers. The four Western teams which placed one man each were the Chicago Bears, Western champions; Green Bay Packers, Detroit Lions and Cleveland Rams.

Baugh Called "Greatest"

Members of the backfield are Ace Parker, Dodgers, at quarterback; Sammy Baugh, Redskins, and Whizzer White, Lions, at the halfback posts, and Johnny Drake, Rams, at fullback.

Baugh is the year's greatest back. The Redskins couldn't have hoped to win the Eastern title without Baugh's sensational passing. He completed 111 passes out of 177 for yardage totaling 1,367 yards and 12 touchdowns. In addition Baugh was the league's top punter, averaging 30 yards from the line of scrimmage on his kicks.

Parker, one of the lightest backs in the league at 168 pounds, was only slightly less valuable to the Dodgers than Baugh was to the Redskins. Although he started the season hampered by a broken foot which hadn't fully healed, Parker got up speed as the season progressed and at the finish he was a whirlwind. In his last game he pitched two brilliant touchdown passes to enable the Dodgers to beat the Giants for the first time in ten years. Parker is a dangerous runner, especially at turning a pass into a run.

White Led in Yardage

White, the Lions' 190-pounder, led the league in ground gaining with 514 yards in 146 attempts for a 3.5 average. Like Parker, he is a triple-threater and is no slouch at tackling and blocking. The Rams' 214-pound Johnny Drake, who averages nearly 4 yards a clip, rounds out the quartet. Drake is perhaps the least publicized back in the league who is a star in every sense of the word.

The league's No. 1 lineman is Danny Fortmann, Chicago Bears' rip roaring guard. Weighing 210, Fortmann is rough and tough enough to man-handle the league's Giants weighing 25 to 35 pounds more than he does. He is a star at leading the interference and a savage tackler. The other guard is Steve Slivinski, Washington's hard-hitting 210-pounder.

Mel Hein, Giants' veteran, is the league's center for the tenth time. He still is the best pass defender in the business and a steady workman offensively and defensively.

Hutson Honored at End

The tackles are tall, smart Jim Barber, Washington, and Bruiser Kinard, Brooklyn. Barber weighs 230 and Kinard 210. They are both tough men to get out of a play and can punish a line to pulp.

On the wings, Don Hutson, of Green Bay, the league's greatest pass catcher, and Jim Poole, of the Giants, the league's top defensive end, get the call. Hutson caught seven touchdown passes, and led the league in scoring with 57 points, one more than Johnny Drake. Poole has no superior at breaking up interference and knifing through to bring down a runner.

6 Pro Grid Records Broken in '40 Season

Redskins Break Passing Efficiency Mark, Win Scoring Honors; Philadelphia Eagles Shatter Three; One Is Equaled

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 2.—Six National Football League team records, three of them by the Philadelphia Eagles, were broken and one was tied during the 1940 season.

Final statistics showed all the new standards were in forward passing, while the tied mark was six touchdowns by rushing in one game by Detroit against the Chicago Cardinals.

With Davey O'Brien doing most of the heaving, Philadelphia completed 152 passes out of 362 attempts to break the league mark of 127 completions made by Cleveland last year, O'Brien's feat of 33 completions for 316 yards in yesterday's game with Washington established two one-game records.

Washington, featuring Sammy Baugh, hung up a new efficiency mark of 59 per cent in passing with 144 completed out of 244. The aerial proficiency of Washington and Philadelphia led to new records for total league passing. A total of 968 completions out of 2,252 tosses for 42.8 per cent was registered by the ten teams, breaking the standards of 951 completions and 42.4 per cent made a year ago.

The Redskins won scoring honors with 245 points, while Green Bay led in ground gaining with 3,381 yards. New York, Brooklyn and the Chicago Cardinals were tops in defensive play. Opponents gained only 2,219 yards against the Giants, scored 120 points against Brooklyn and completed only 36 per cent of their passes against the Cards.

John Ball, Ex-British Golf Star Dies at 79

Holywell, Wales, Dec. 2 (AP).—John Ball, 79, eight times winner of the British amateur golf championship, died today. Ball was the first amateur golfer to win the British open title and the only prior to Bobby Jones, the American star, to win both the open and amateur championships in the same year.

Redskins See Bears' Plays Diagrammed

Abandoning his usual custom of giving the team an off day on Monday, Redskin Coach Ray Flaherty yesterday called the squad into a lengthy blackboard study session to go over the plays used by the Chicago Bears.

After their skull drill, the Redskins voted to split their share in the 60 per cent of the $101,000 gate for the championship playoff as follows:

Thirty-two players will get full shares, while Don Irwin and Andy Farkas, on the inactive list most the entire year, will divide a share. Coach Ray Flaherty and Assistant Coach Turk Edwards will get a full share, while Trainer (Doc) Mauro will get a half and Clubhouse Assistant Fred Baxter one-third.

The Skins and the Bears players will split the 60 per cent players cut on a 60-40, winner-loser basis. It will mean about $750 per man to the Redskins if they win. Ten per cent of the 70 per cent being taken off the top is divided by Brooklyn and Green Bay, the two second-place teams in each loop.

This morning at 10 o'clock the Skins will start their most intensive week of work on offense and defense for this Sunday's date with the Bears for the championship of the National Professional Football League.

The Redskins' record for beating teams they have previously defeated has been nothing to boast of this season, and they'll be the underdog when they take on the team they licked, 7-3, here November 17.

Flaherty said the Skins expect to be at full strength but for the absence of Tackles Bill Young and Turk Edwards, nothing new at this time, however, Roy Zimmerman, rookie back, and Jimmy Johnston, sophomore fullback, were both injured Sunday in the Eagle game, but will be ready for the bears.

Frank Filchock, who only last Friday was released from Emergency Hospital after a ten-day stay, should be back in form, Flaherty said. The Skins will emphasize defensive work this week. Center Vic Carroll, shifted to tackle to make up for Young's absence, hasn't played the position all year, and consequently is not quite ready to go up against a club with the greatest tackles and offensive power in the league.

Bears Have Four Field-Goal Experts

The Chicago Bears will have four different field goal kickers to call upon if needed against the Redskins in the championship playoff game Sunday.

Phil Martinovich was recently recalled from the Newark farm club and has kicked two 3-pointers in as many attempts. Last year he booted three out of three against the New York Giants while playing with Detroit. In addition, there are Jack Manders, all-time league field goal specialist, who has kicked two this year; Lee Artoe, who kicked one 52 yards against the Giants this year, and Bob Snyder, who has one to his credit from the 47-yard line.

Albright Five Meets Wilson Tomorrow

Teachers Open Schedule at Tech Gym at 8:30 o'Clock

Coach (Doc) White will hold a final practice session this afternoon in preparation for Wilson Teachers College 1940-41 basketball debut tomorrow evening at 8:30 in Tech's gymnasium.

A powerful quintet from Albright College, in Reading, Pa., a new addition to a strengthened schedule, will furnish the opposition to a greatly improved Teachers squad.

One of the mainstays of this year's five is guard Ray Halben who joins Wilson after playing with Eastern High a couple of years back and with George Washington last season.

Corriden Signed As Dodger Coach

Atlanta, Dec. 2 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers announced tonight they had signed John (Red) Corriden as a coach.

He had been with the Chicago Cubs for eight years, one as a scout and seven as a coach, until he was let out last month along with Manager Leo (Gabby) Hartnett and Coach George Uhle.

Manager Leo Durocher of the Dodgers said Corriden would coach at first base with Charles (Chuck) Dressen remaining in the third-base coaching box.

Fred Fitzsimmons, the corpulent pitcher who served as first-base coach last season when he wasn't busy winning 16 games on the mound, will confine his duties to pitching next year, Durocher said. He thought Fitz would be of more value if he didn't have the extra burden of coaching to carry.

Ben Tincup, the big Indian who also was a Dodger coach, will be assigned to scouting under the new setup.

Six Kickers Picked For School Classic

Officials of the Arlington County Monarch Club, which will sponsor a post-season charity scholastic clash between Gonzaga High and Washington-Lee, yesterday announced the names of six stellar kickers who will compete in a field goal contest between the halves of the game at W. L.

Augie Lio and Bill Nealon will represent Georgetown University; Pete Sachon and Mike Cherello will represent Catholic University; and former greats taking part will be Gus Welch, former Carlisle quarterback, and former G. W. Tackle Harry Deming.

Duke Places 3 on All-Star Grid Squad

Clemson Gets 2 Spots; Severin, Tarheel End, Is Selected Captain

By Barton Pattie
Associated Press Sports Writer

Richmond, Va., Dec. 22 (AP).—Clemson's well-balanced squad won the Southern Conference football championship but Duke University annexed all-star honors when coaches and sports writers of the area voted berths for four Blue Devils on the loop's 1940 Associated Press honor team.

North Carolina captured three honor spots and the title-winning Clemson Tigers two. Richmond and Wake Forest were awarded one position each by the 81 mentors and scribes who balloted on the squad.

Paul Severin, North Carolina's All-America star, and Joe Blalock, Clemson's lanky junior, won the end posts for a second time with Severin leading the ticket to earn the captaincy of the mythical eleven.

Andy Fronczek, rugged blond Richmonder, and True Toe Tony Ruffa, whose field goal almost won the 1939 Rose Bowl game for Duke, were the first tackle choices in a strong field.

Duke's captain, Alex Winterson, and North Carolina's Bill Faircloth were the guard winners. Bob Barnett, of Duke, was given the center job over a half dozen standout contenders.

The experts agreed on a versatile backfield composed of Jim Lalanne, of North Carolina, Steve Lach, of Duke, Tony Gallovich, of Wake Forest, and Charlie (Tuffy) Timmons, of Clemson, leaving in reserve such stellar performers as Richmond's Arthur Jones, Clemson's Chippy Maness, South Carolina's Al Grygo and Duke's Jap Davis.

The All-Southern Conference selections:

First Team.	Position.	Second Team
Severin, N. C.	End	Carnell, Duke
Blalock, Clemson	End	Jett, Wake Forest
Fronczek, R'mond	Tackle	Kimball, N. C.
Ruffa, Duke	Tackle	Fritts, Clemson
Winterson, Duke	Guard	Walker, V. M. I.
Faircloth, N. C.	Guard	Calos, M. C.
Barnett, Duke	Center	Sharpe, Clemson
Lalanne, N. C.	Back	Jones, Richmond
Lach, Duke	Back	Grygo, S. C.
Gallovich, W. F.	Back	Maness, Clemson
Timmons, Clemson	Back	Davis, Duke

Yehudis Wind Up Fine Football Season

Al Connolly, former Boston College and G. W. gridder, put the Hearst Yehudis 135-pound gridders through an undefeated season of 11 games, scoring 220 points against eight for the opponents. The final victory was by a 6-0 score over Lafayette.

Bill Tanney, Alan Dodds, Tad Henry, Henry Aurand, Ed Rogers, Jack Faulkner, Juju Owens, Dick Morse, Monk Barbee, Dick Schwab, Wally Stout, David Parsons, Kirk Heiss, Jack Mussel, Bob Kid and Ed Sullivan were members of the Yehudis squad.

Arizona State Minus Regular Tackles for Sun Bowl Game

Big Job Confronts Coach Dixie Howell Before Western Reserve Is Met at El Paso, Jan. 1

Tempe, Ariz., Dec. 2 (AP).—The biggest job confronting Football Coach Dixie Howell is to plug two holes in the Arizona State Teachers College line before his Border Conference champions battle Western Reserve University, of Cleveland, in the Sun Bowl at El Paso, Tex., New Year's Day.

His two regular tackles were considered definitely out of the Sun Bowl game. T. K. Wootan is in a hospital recovering from an appendectomy. Olin Mason has a broken bone in his ankle.

The replacements are anything but reassuring.

The 28-year-old Howell, former Alabama All-America, is noted for his resourcefulness, however, and may be able to put together a strong forward wall in time for the far Southwest's grid classic.

The Bulldog line will average about 190 pounds.

Arizona State, which has won seven games, tied and lost one this season, depends on a fast breaking running attack. Three of its backs are among the four leading ground gainers in the conference.

The passing attack is just good enough to be a threat, and usually is held in reserve. The punting of Wayne (Ripper) Pitts, star halfback, averaged 33.70 yards for the season. Bob Lackey, an end, who does the place-kicking for point after touchdown, seldom misses.

Pitts, 185-pound triple-threat man, stands out among Arizona State's big squad of fast backs. He was named first-string fullback on the Little All-America team selected by a sports publication (Collier's).

Arizona State suffered its only defeat of the season at the hands of Hardin-Simmons University. It hasn't lost a conference game in more than two years.

Light practice will be resumed next Monday.

Corona Seen Sans Eclipse

Secrets of the stars are being disclosed with the help of new instruments. One of these is a camera, invention of a French astronomer, to observe the sun's corona without an eclipse.

Soldierette Takes Inaugural Feature at Charles Town

Red Wrack, Favorite, Beaten Out

Walter Light Runs 3d; Crowd of 5,000 Attends First Day's Racing in W. Virginia

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 2.—Giving America its only racing of the day, Charles Town's sporty, 6-furlong track opened an 18-day meeting this afternoon. The feature, the Front Royal Purse, went to Mrs. F. W. Bond's Soldierette, one of the best sprinters ever to see action hereabouts, in a driving finish. A length and a half behind the winner came Mrs. M. Knieriem's Red Wrack to be second while operating in the role of favorite. Three lengths farther back came Mrs. J. B. Belk's Walter Light to be third in a starting field of ten.

The Charles Town Jockey Club had the cooperation of the weatherman. A bright sunny day was the order and served to lure 5,000 fans. The track was in good condition.

Soldierette, a 4-year-old filly that failed to win but was prominent while racing with the top-flight sprinters during the Maryland mile season, came within ne-fifth f a second of equalling the track record set by Royal Cross, one of the horses that finished behind her today. Soldierette's time was 1:19, 2-5.

The crowd made Red Wrack the favorite and Soldierette paid a $9.60 mutuel.

Jockey George Napier rode Soldierette after Trainer F. W. Bond had assigned and then withdrew several riders. Napier proved a good pick for he performed as faultless as the filly. He took her away prominently and had her in front before the field banked the clubhouse turn. Red Wrack, Randle's Queen and Blablah were closest to the pacemaker as the field turned into the backstretch.

Red Wrack Makes Bid

Napier kept Soldierette off the rail and urged her out to a length-and-a-half lead. Red Wrack made a bid approaching the stretch and forced Napier to put the pressure on the filly. She was equal to the task, however, and held Red Wrack safe in the stretch run. Walter Light replaced the stopping Randle's Queen and Blablah after 4 furlongs, but could not get close enough to be a threat.

Jockey W. L. Taylor, making his first appearance at this track, failed to ride a winner in two tries. He had the mount aboard Irish Moon in the feature and got all out of the veteran that he could. Irish Moon finished in fourth position. In his first trip to the post, Taylor was forced to pull up going to the first turn but urged his mount into second money.

Claggett Rides 3 Winners

The riding hero of the day was Henry Claggett, the youngster who rode his first winner during the Marlboro meeting last summer. Claggett chalked up three winners, including both ends of the daily double.

He took Westing, owned by George Perry, of Marlboro, Md., to the front in the second race and the filly was not caught. Jockey Taylor tried to make Silver Beam catch her but was beaten off 2½ lenghts. Irish Mirth was third. Westing paid $7.40.

Claggett came back in the third race to boot Schley Goree home and the victory completed a $46 pay-off in the daily double. Claggett brought the 5-year-old from back in the pack to displace Challante and lead the latter to the wire by a length. Pandoramint was third in the field of eight. Schley Goree paid $9.80.

The Miami boy's third winner was in the fifth race. He piloted Miss Rhoda Christmas' Cheer Me, the odds-on favorite, and had no trouble bringing the daughter of Solace to the wire seven lengths in front of her closest rival. Quatredom and Imperial Jones were second and third. Cheer Me paid $3.60.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CLOCK WINDER, $8.60, $3.80, $2.60; BUDDY AL, $2.60, $2.20; LITTLE HARPIST, $3.00.

CLOCK WINDER rushed to contention on the inside at once, raced WHY WAR into submission to take command and was kept to a drive to the end. BUDDY AL was well placed from the start, came on the outside and closed with good energy. LITTLE HARPIST, off well, dropped back and came gamely at the end under punishment. WHOOSH moved up menacingly and then bunt.

SECOND RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 2:10. Off at once. Winner, George Perry's ch. f. (3), by Westwick—Lespedesda II. Trained by P. J. McGuire. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:16⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WESTING, $7.40, $3.60, $2.80; SILVER BEAM, $4.00, $3.20; IRISH MIRTH, $2.90.

WESTING, off slightly, was hustled going to the first turn to assume the lead, was steadied while setting the pace and won with something in reserve. SILVER BEAM, off slowly and unable to find racing room going to the first turn, came through on the inside to improve his position and closed with good energy under strong handling. IRISH MIRTH was forwardly placed from the start, made bids to get to the leader and weakened at the close. UPSEE DUTCH could not threaten.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:42½. Off at 2:43⅕. Winner, R. A. Bowman, jr.'s ch. h. (5), by Ed Crump—Lucre. Trained by A. S. Bowman. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:21⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SCHLEY GOREE, $9.80, $4.20, $3.20; CHALLANTE, $3.80, $3.20; PANDORAMINT, $7.00.

SCHLEY GOREE saved ground when unable to improve his position early, came out on the backstretch, moved up gradually to wear down CHALLANTE and won going away. CHALLANTE was hustled to the front going to the first turn, disposed of PANDORAMINT, saved ground, but could not resist the winner while put to pressure. PANDORAMINT could not keep up with the pacemaker and came again in the stretch run. MIGHTY BUSY was hard ridden and showed a good effort.

Daily Double, WESTING and SCHLEY GOREE, Paid $46.00

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:11½. Off at 3:11¼. Winner, C. B. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PAMUNKEY, $8.40, $5.20, $3.40; CURVES, $12.60, $5.00; MATCH POINT, $3.20.

PAMUNKEY, going in her best form, was rated closest to MATCH POINT'S pace, assumed command when called upon and held sway thereafter under strong handling. CURVES, within striking distance from the start, came to the inside in the stretch and closed resolutely. MATCH POINT set a good early pace and held on gamely. HIGH LANCE lacked early speed and came boldly at the close.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won handily; place easily. Went to post at 3:41½. Off at 3:41½. Winner, Rhoda Christmas' b. f. (3), by Solace—Heliodes. Trained by R. A. Johnson. Value to winner, $425; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:46⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHEER ME, $3.60, $3.00, $2.60; QUATREDOM, $22.20, $7.60; IMPERIAL JONES, $4.60.

CHEER ME was nicely rated early while closest to the pace of NAVIGATION, disposed of the latter when placed to a drive, drew out gradually and won with speed in reserve. QUATREDOM was in the first flight from the start and was eased up approaching the finish. IMPERIAL JONES came with good energy in the closing test. NAVIGATION was hard handled while setting the pace and trying to ward off CHEER ME and weakened.

SIXTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Front Royal. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:11. Off at 4:11. Winner, Mrs. F. W. Bond's blk. f. (4), by Cohort—Concessancy. Trained by F. W. Bond. Value to winner, $700; second, $175; third, $75; fourth, $50. Time, 1:19⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SOLDIERETTE, $9.60, $3.60, $3.00; RED WRACK, $3.00, $2.60; WALTER LIGHT (field), $3.60.

SOLDIERETTE assumed command going to the first turn, drew clear of RED WRACK, withstood the challenge from the latter approaching the stretch and held away to the end under strong handling. RED WRACK saved ground throughout, made his bid and was held safe. WALTER LIGHT rallied mildly, but was no match for the other two. IRISH MOON could not threaten at any stage.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:42. Off at 4:42½. Winner, F. M. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FIVE-O-FOUR, $6.00, $4.00, $3.60; BUBBLEWORTH, $13.40, $6.60; BIG GAY, $9.80.

FIVE-O-FOUR was within striking distance on the outside from the start, circled the leaders to take command and was under a hard ride to the end. BUBBLEWORTH went to the front at once, saved ground while setting the pace and came again in the stretch run. BIG GAY closed full of run. KESWICK HILL could not keep up early and came boldly at the close.

Dear Al:

Our little track is growing up. Twelve papers from Boston, Detroit, Philadelphia, New York and Washington, as well as three wire services, are represented at the meeting. I can remember when yours truly and another guy had the whole press box to ourselves. By the way, the scribes came here to see Jockey W. L. Taylor in action but it was not Taylor of whom they were talking last night. The boy who was the subject of conversation was Henry Claggett who rode three winners. They saw him at Bowie but yesterday they got a peak at some real horsemanship. His ride on Schley Goree, after being pinched back early was a masterpiece. He saved all kinds of ground and moved at the right time. Taylor had some excuses. He had only two mounts. In his first appearance on the track, he was off slowly and had to take up going to the first turn. The next time out he was on Irish Moon and finished fourth. Irish Moon simply was outclassed. Somebody will have to dig up some live horses for Taylor. He can ride and make no mistakes about that. Among arrivals here early today was S. J. (Sammy) Hicks, with six horses owned by D. J. Sullivan. The remainder of the Sullivan horses, Hicks said, will be turned out for the winter on F. A. Bonsal's farm in Maryland. With Hicks came two riders under contract to Sullivan. They are D. J. Driscoll, an apprentice who is a brother of Jockey Danny Driscoll, and the first-string rider for the Sullivan establishment, Charley Friedman. Sullivan is a San Antonio sportsman. Owner-trainer Don Yates, of Baltimore, who recently purchased the 5-year-old race mare, Easter Holiday, from Louis Morris, arrived this morning with three horses. W. J. (Buddy) Hirsch, and Dabney Harrison, two of the very successful younger trainers of the country, today paid their first visit to Charles Town. Both expressed high satisfaction with the plant. Joe Hines came in early today from Louisville, with a draft of horses owner by Victor Noyes, of Maryland. Hines will act here as stable agent for the Noyes stable. Looked like home-coming week here yesterday. Happy Witmer, Patsy Grant, Eddie Smith and all the boys reported. They tell me Nora, who played me several solos on her harmonica last year, has graduated to the accordion. See you on the rail.

Bill.

First race—Bob's Pass showed some good efforts at Delaware Park last summer and appears well placed in the day's opener. Carries top weight of 117 pounds but I'm forced to string along. Fall Hazard raced well around the half-milers and is dangerous. True Line has speed and is likely to be in the money circle.

Second race—Swift Air promising to have W. L. Taylor aboard and has speed. This distance suits. Shanteb is second on the reserve list and will have to be dealt with if sent postward. Tell Me is still a maiden but showed a good race on the Maryland milers.

Third race—Miss Dolly Kay seems to have an edge over this brand of platers. Needs only the right ride and I believe she will get it. Remelee has been freshened and always runs well at this track. Pack Saddle to take care of the others.

Fourth race—Gold Buckle had class at one time and is reported to have worked well. This could be the spot for a winning effort. Fritz W has speed and should be a keen factor in company of this sort. Yankee Lad and Accidental, on the reserve list, will be right there if sent postward.

Fifth race—Paper Girl showed enough speed at Bowie to warrant a top selection in a field of this sort. Breaks from the rail and should make the most of the position. Doctor's Nurse has been running over her head and should go well in this field. Pimlico Lady has speed but may not make the turns.

Sixth race—Maecloud, winner of two at Bowie, appears best of those gathered for this 7-furlong affair. Part Wales has speed and should be in front part of the way. Pomiva to account for the show money.

Seventh race—Conville is an in-and-outer but seems ready for the question in this field. Somali, winner at Bowie, and Palkin, winner at Laurel, should fill out the money bracket.

Best bet—Paper Girl.

Washington A. A. Cross-Country Race Here Sunday

The Washington Athletic Association will hold its first annual cross-country race Sunday over a course in Rock Creek Park, starting at 2 o'clock.

The race will sanctioned by the District A. A. U. as a championship event, with the first local runner to finish being recognized as champion.

Entries will close Thursday. Invitations have been sent to New York A. C., winner of the recent national championships, and teams in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Newark, Jersey City and in nearby Virginia and Maryland. Entries are being taken by Director Harry Helme, P. O. Box 105.

Half a Gym No Drawback At Rockville

Fire Forces Cagers Into Limited Space But Drills Go On

Half a gymnasium is better than none, Coach Ralph Keller, of the Richard Montgomery High five in Rockville, has found out as he sends his team through stiff drills for the approaching season.

Forced to share his athletic plant with classroom equipment and filing cabinets since a fire destroyed half the school last year, Keller has been unable to stage a full-sized scrimmage so far, but he thinks his team will do quite well, anyway.

"Except for the fact that we have only one end of the gym to work in," he says, "limiting us to offensive and defensive drills, the boys are coming along all right. We'll have to play all our games away from home, of course. Our main trouble, however, is keeping our players eligible. They don't seem to like to study."

A 20-game schedule has been arranged, Keller reveals, the first two clashes being largely for the purpose of acclimating his basketers to a whole court.

Plans for a new Richard Montgomery High are now being drawn up for the approval of Montgomery County's Board of Commissioners. School officials hope building will be started soon after the first of the year.

Johnny McTeer Returns to Eagle Lineup Tonight

Boston Olympics Invade for First Time at Riverside

By Jack Munhall

Johnny (Bad Boy) McTeer will rejoin his Washington Eagles teammates tonight as the Boston Olympics make their first appearance at Riverside Stadium for an Eastern Amateur League match at 8:30 o'clock.

The 233-pound McTeer who, together with Baltimore's Bob Dill was indefinitely suspended for fighting here last Friday, was reinstated yesterday with a warning from President Tom Lockhart not to repeat the offense.

Several Injured

Regaining McTeer at this time is especially welcome to the Eagles who are in battered condition after successive rough matches with the Orioles and the Atlantic City Sea Gulls. Jack Macbeth, newcomer wing, is not expected to play tonight owing to a muscle separation and bruised heel, and several other key Washington players are afflicted with various ailments.

The list includes Jimmy McCurry, bruised back; Len Burnie, bruised instep; Ross Knipfel, wrenched knee; Ross Rossignol, chiney horse and Hal Dewey, twisted knee.

The Eagles, though they are setting a remarkably fast pace with eight victories in ten starts, need a triumph tonight if they are to maintain a comfortable lead over the reviving New York Rovers. The Rovers, defeating River Vale 3-1, Sunday for their third straight victory, are now only one game or two points, behind Washington.

Olympics in Cellar

Washington, however, will be decided favorite over the Boston Yankees, who have experienced great difficulty in finding the stride. Composed chiefly of former college stars, Boston is in last place but still it has been a hard club to beat.

The Olympics gave the Eagles a pair of stiff tussles in Boston last month as Washington opened its season with a sweep of the two-game series. Four former college captains will represent the Olympics. They are Dan Sullivan, left wing, and Frank Spain, center, from Dartmouth, and Gerry Desrosiers, right wing, and Al Carvelli, center, from Boston College.

Courteau Leading

The two Washington players the Olympics must stop if they are to win tonight are Center Norm Burns and Wing Paul Courteau, who are waging a close battle for league honors. Of late the scrappy little Courteau has been the hottest shooter in the circuit.

Tomorrow night the Eagles will invade River Vale for an engagement with the Skeeters, and on Friday they will return home for an important match with the New York Rovers which will benefit The Washington Post Needy Family Fund.

Owner Severine G. Leoffler will donate 10 per cent of the net receipts to this worthy cause, and, for this reason and also because the Rovers will be here, the season's largest crowd is expected.

Line-ups:

Eagles	Position	Olympics
Colvin	Goal	Polich
Knipfel	L.D.	Anderson
Burrage	R.D.	Thompson
Rossignol	Center	Spain
Dewey	L.W.	Beland
Pranschke	R.W.	Desrosiers

Spares: Eagles—McCurry, McTeer, Burns, McBride, Hemming, MacBeth, Malley, Courteau, Germann. Olympics—Stubbs, Yourkerwiez, Foster, Sullivan, Guibord, Allen, Carvelli, Costello.

On Fishing

Many who have erected blinds down the Potomac, as well as on the bay and Patuxent River, have complained of the failure of birds to come in. This fault might be blamed on any one of a half dozen different things.

ACKERMAN

First, it might be the location. One can't just put a blind out anywhere and expect to decoy birds under conditions which usually prevail in the early season.

Natural cover should always be used if at all possible, and some say—not to build it too thick, avoid making it appear like a haystack or a grove of trees.

We wouldn't argue over the fact, but we have seen some real monstrosities in our day, and ducks come in to them. Consider too, the Hatteras box blinds, built in all sizes and shapes, but before the first flights, and because they are there when the birds arrive, are accepted as natural.

There are some bay blinds constructed with all the comforts of home—and by that we mean, beyond the ordinary seats, shell boxes and gun rests. Two in particular that have, not only thatched covers for protection in falling weather, but white seats on the built-in Chick Sales. And, ducks come in to them too, so the failure of wildfowl to decoy can not always be in the construction of the blind.

The placing of decoys can be a source of trouble. If you don't know the ways of ducks, a guide for the first few times out is a real investment.

You'll find, if it is at all possible, he will set with the wind to the shooter's back. About 50 to 75 decoys for the diving ducks such as "cans," scaup, redheads, whistlers and ruddy ducks, and that he will bunch them about 50 yards off the blind.

Clyde Mitchell, Remington expert, says: "Diving ducks will not fly over heavy cover, or up against a wooded shoreline to reach your decoys."

He also believes that for shallow water ducks not more than 18 or 20 decoys should be used, and within 40 yards of the blind. Which we don't question for a minute, yet down in the North Carolina Sound country the usual practice is to set twice that number down the wind from 30 to 40 goose decoys. We believe the location makes this a variable rule.

The trick of keeping the goose decoys in the wind we learned just this fall. We know it works for, setting out on a northeast wind, the shooting was good until it changed northwest. Not a bird came in until they were rearranged.

The idea in back of it involves the feeding habits of the birds in that country. The Canada geese break the grasses loose from the bottom in the shoal waters and the ducks lay back to pick up what floats down to them.

Capital Banks Launch Later Opening Time

New 9:30 Schedule Standardized After Tests by Several

A 9:30 a. m. opening time, half an hour later than before, was put into effect yesterday by all Washington banks. Closing hours on weekdays remain at 2 p. m. Hours on Saturday will be from 9:30 a. m. to noon.

The new schedule, tested by several banks before being standardized, will make compliance with the wage-hour law much simpler, according to local officials.

It was pointed out that on the 15th and last day of each month, Government paydays, the hours will be lengthened from 9:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. When the 15th or last day of the month falls on Saturday, Sunday or a legal holiday, banking hours will be to 5:30 on the next succeeding full business day.

Underwriters to Meet

Grant Taggart, secretary of the National Association of Life Insurance Underwriters, will address members of the local chapter at a luncheon meeting today in the Hotel Lee Sheraton. Mr. Taggart, of Wyoming, will speak on "Work Habits."

About 50 new members of the local chapter will attend the luncheon in addition to 200 other members, according to President John D. Marsh. The speaker, Mr. Marsh said, is a life member of the million-dollar Round Table achieved through a record of insuring about 5,000 persons for a total of $16,000,000 in the sparsely settled Wyoming area.

The luncheon will begin at 11:30 a. m., half an hour ahead of the usual time, to permit Mr. Taggart to make a plane connection.

Clearings Continue Up

Accumulating at a record rate Washington bank clearings continued upward in November with check transactions totaling $132,125,590. This was the best November aggregate on record and brought the 10-month old total to $1,274,489,329, according to the local clearing house association.

$10,000,000 Issue Offered

Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Lehman Brothers head a large group of underwriters who are offering today $10,000,000 National Dairy Products Corporation debentures in a financing operation which, when completed, will effect the consolidation and refunding at lower rates of all the corporation's securities ranking senior to the common stock.

The offering consists of $55,000,000 of 3¼ per cent debentures, due December 1, 1960, at 104¾ per cent and accrued interest, and $15,000,000 of 0.375 per cent to 2.10 per cent serial debentures, maturing $750,000 semi-annually, June 1and December 1, 1941 to 1950, inclusive, at 100 per cent and accrued interest.

Smith, Barney & Co., which has a Washington branch, is a member of the underwriting group.

Air Traffic Rises 61% in Ten Months

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—An increase of 61.42 per cent in air passenger volume during the first ten months of 1940, as compared with the same period of 1939, was announced today by the Air Transport Association of America.

Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the association, said revenue passenger mileage during the ten months period reached 890,525,123, an increase of 338,834,464 miles over the preceding period.

Rubber Firm Sales Rise 20% in Year

Six leading manufacturers of rubber products had combined net sales of $757,165,918 in 1939, an increase of 20.7 per cent over 1938, the Federal Trade Commission reported last night.

Their combined net income of $67,761,143 before taxes represented a return of 9.5 per cent on capital, compared with 5.9 per cent for the previous year.

New York Cotton

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Cotton futures inched up 1 to 3 points today, but turnover was slim as an uneasy market considered Washington rumors of a substantial change in the farm program.

Biggest worry to many traders was the possibility the Government might alter the present loan system for the staple and thus remove an important price prop. The trade leaned more to the belief a type of processing tax might be imposed, proceeds of which would go to farmers to bring their returns closer to a domestic parity price.

From the South came word large growers refused bids of $2 to $3 a bale over loan rates, with the result offerings of spot cotton were small.

Worth Street brokers reported continued active Government inquiry for sheetings and industrial goods. Prices were unchanged at recently set high levels.

Exports Saturday nil. Season so far, 478,615 bales; port receipts, 18,427. Port stocks, 3,214,765.

Sugar Futures

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Domestic sugar futures closed unchanged to 1 point higher today on an extension of last week's Cuban buying. Sales totaled 8,900 tons.

The world list dipped ½ to 2 points under late pressure. Sales totaled 1,960 tons; March .76 bids; May .79 bid. The market seemed unaffected by increasing indications Cuba would limit the next crop.

A sale of 1,000 tons of Philippine raw sugar due December 4 was reported. This afterm and one other were the only ones available under 2.90 cents.

Refined locally remained at 4.35 cents a pound.

Stock Prices Level After Early Buoyancy; Utilities Firmer; Steels, Aviations Lower

New York, Dec. 2.—An early rising trend in the stock market today flattened out as the session proceeded and at the last prices turned slightly irregular.

Bidding for steels at the start made the list look fairly good for a while, but momentum soon faded along with quotations.

The Associated Press average of 60 issues was unchanged at 44. Of 740 individual stocks traded, 281 finished up, 254 down and 205 unchanged. Transfers totaled 478,380 shares compared with 528,035 in the preceding full session.

Principal handicaps to the advance, brokers suggested, included thoughts of a jump in corporation taxes next year, the belief considerable year-end selling for income tax adjustments still had to be absorbed and the lack of information regarding the amount of unsold British-owned American securities overhanging the market. War news did not seem particularly disturbing.

On the bullish side was the continuance of roseate business and industrial prospects. A case in point here was the official estimate putting this week's steel mill operations at 96.9 per cent of capacity, up 3 of a point from the week before, at a new peak for this industry.

Aviation stocks never did get going and the majority finished under water. Sluggishness of engine production was said to have put a brake on this group. Utilities did better than usual as it was realized some of these stocks had recently hit new 1940 lows and were selling on a substantial high-yield basis. The belief of some that the market generally had been well "sold out" in November brought in support for other departments in the morning.

Retaining most improvement were duPont, Chrysler, North American, Consolidated Edison, Public Service of N. J., N. Y. Central, Loew's, American Can, duPont, Sears Roebuck, Great Northern, Union Carbide and Texas Corporation.

U. S. Steel ended at Saturday's final level and Bethlehem was down ⅝. Losses were posted for Santa Fe, Westinghouse, Anaconda, U. S. Rubber, Douglas Aircraft, Boeing, United Aircraft, Sperry, Eastman Kodak, Montgomery Ward and American Telephone.

Bonds and commodities were uneven. Wheat at Chicago was ⅝ of a cent a bushel lower to up ¼ and corn was down ⅛ to ⅛. Cotton was up 5 to 15 cents a bale.

Among scattered Curb gainers were Master Electric, American Gas, Borne Scrymser, Bath Iron Works and Pittsburgh Plate Glass. Declines were registered for Cities Service, Electric Bond & Share, Bell Aircraft, Brewster Aero, Gulf Oil and Humble Oil. Volume here was around 120,000 shares against 127,000 last Friday.

South Reaches New Peak in Construction

11-Month Volume Of 1.2 Billion Tops Any Full Year's

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Dec. 2.—Southern construction contracts in the 11-month period ended November 30 reached an all-time high of $1,244,711,000, smashing all records for States below the Mason and Dixon line, not only for any comparable period but for any one year, the Manufacturers Record reported today.

Public construction, the Record said, leads the various types of work with a total of $490,357,000, with industrial building second at $343,713,000. Other construction includes: Private building, $147,372,000; highway work, $137,882,000; and engineering projects, $125,357,000.

Texas, due to the building at Corpus Christi of a naval air training base and large industrial projects, including a North American aviation plant at Dallas, led the 16 States with an 11-month total of $220,598,000.

Virginia took second place with a total of $176,603,000 which includes funds being expended on a rayon plant addition and large shipbuilding and naval station expansions. Maryland and West Virginia totals were past the $100,000,000-mark, with the rest of the State totals ranging from $71,625,000 for Georgia to $20,326,000 for Arkansas.

$53,000,000 Boston Edison Issue Awarded

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—First Boston Corporation and associates today were successful bidders for an issue of $53,000,000 Boston Edison Co. first mortgage bonds on a bid of $103.525 per $100 bond with the interest coupon set at 2¾ per cent.

Total return to the company was $54,868,250. Proceeds will be used to retire the currently outstanding 3½s.

Virtually every important investment firm in the country participated in one of the three syndicates which bid for the issue.

Lead Price Reduced By Another Company

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—The price of lead was reduced by American Smelting & Refining Co. 15 points, or $3 a ton today, to 5.50 cents a pound, New York basis.

The reduction, second of that amount within a week, was attributed in metal circles to a slowing up of demand from the high levels prevailing since last summer when consumers stocked heavily in anticipation of armament needs.

Chicago Livestock

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—Prices advanced 10 to 20 cents today on a liberal run of hogs. Cattle sold steady to weak and lambs steady to 10 cents lower.

Although salable supplies of hogs amounted to 22,000, a broad demand aided in lifting values higher. The dressed market was unchanged, best wholesale pork loins being quoted at $13.50 per hundredweight.

Strictly choice offerings of steers and yearlings held steady, but short-fed steers, in liberal supply, sold weak to 25 cents lower.

(U. S. Dept. Agr.)—SALABLE HOGS—Receipts 22,000; total, 20,000; active to all; 10-20 higher than Friday's average; top, 6.35; bulk good and choice, 210-320 lbs. butchers, 6.00@6.35; most 180-200 lbs. lights, 5.90@6.15; some 150-170 lbs. underweights, 5.50@5.85; bulk good 330-500 lbs. packing sows, 5.35@5.75.

SALABLE CATTLE—Receipts, 15,000; calves, 2,000; strictly good and choice fed steers and yearlings steady; supplies comparatively small; liberal run on short-fed steers here weak to 25 lower, mostly weak on kind sellins at 12.00 downward; top, 14.75, with 13.50 bid; best yearlings, 12.50; several lots of mixed ½ and ¾-blood bullocks 12.50 and better; moderate supply medium to good grades sold at 12.00 down to 9.00; replacement dealers interested in meaty weighty feeders selling at 9.50 downward; fed heifers steady to 25 lower; choice offerings steady; cow run liberal, but demand still broad; market steady to weak; bulls and vealers steady; most classes in small supply; weighty sausage bulls to 7.35; vealers mostly 11.00 down; stockers and feeders steady to weak; good to choice stock calves up to 11.50.

SALABLE SHEEP—Receipts 11,000; total, 13,500; fat lambs opening steady to 10 lower than Friday's close; seven decks good fed Western lambs, 9.60; load lots good to choice grades held 9.50 and a little above; few good to choice native lambs, 9.40; nothing done early on sheep.

Foreign Exchange

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—The dollars of Hongkong and Shanghai rallied in the free foreign money market today after incurring sizable losses last week.

The Hongkong unit advanced .01 of a cent to 23.56 cents, and the Shanghai money .05 of a cent to 6 cents.

The Canadian dollar inched up to 86⅛ U. S. cents, while sterling dipped ½ cent to $4.03⅛.

Auto Industry Sets Output At 450,000 Units This Month

Assembly, Heaviest Since Summer of 1937, Reported Ahead of Retail Demand With 'Reserve' Supply About 400,000 Cars

By David J. Wilkie

Associated Press Automotive Editor

Detroit, Dec. 2.—The automobile industry which has been producing passenger cars and trucks at the rate of about 25,000 a day, tentatively has scheduled 450,000 units as its volume for the final month of the year.

Several plants are operating nine and ten hours a day five days a week and some of them are planninge to work on two Saturdays before Christmas. According to present indications only unexpected labor difficulties would prevent the assembly plants from continuing close to current schedules for the remainder of the year.

Retail demand for new cars has been heavier since the beginning of the new model season on October 1 than it was in the like period of last year and the year before. Nevertheless field stocks have been growing during the last four weeks. Currently they aggregate, according to authoritative sources, approximately 400,000 units, having increased about 125,000 since November 1.

While output is ahead of retail demand the 'reserve" stock is not mounting as speedily as most trade sources expected when the assembly lines began operating above the 115,000 units a week level. If present schedules are maintained through the final month the aggregate output for 1941 should approximate 4,646,000 units and field stocks amount to close to 440,000.

All trade sources appear agreed that the volume of field stocks is not excessive in view of the uncertainties ahead. They point out that the reserve accumulation of new cars late last spring was even heavier than that now on hand but shrank so rapidly that many factories continued their 1940 model season from one to four weeks beyond original schedules.

The current production schedules bring the automobile industry to its highest output level since the summer of 1937. That year saw the production of 5,016,437 cars and trucks, including a first quarter output volume of 1,302,108 vehicles.

Basing their outlook 'on present indications," several producers and sales managers have said the first quarter of 1941 should see a continuance of high level factory activity. There are no indications these authorities say, of a major drop in retail demand during the first three months of the coming year.

November Freight Of B. & O. Declines

Baltimore, Dec. 2 (AP).—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad reported today a November freight handle of 225,504 cars, 146,831 loaded on line and 78,673 recevied from connections.

The handle for November, 1939, was 226,441 cars and for October of this year, 241,782 cars.

British Map $750,000,000 Ship Order

Would Build 750 Merchant Vessels Here, Says Journal

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 2.—The Wall Street Journal said today representatives of the British government in this country are negotiating plans for a program of building about 380 merchant ships in United States shipyards at a cost of approximately $750,000,000.

The program, the newspaper suggested, may rival the "bridge of ships" built by the United States Shipping Board during the World War.

Trade interests were quoted as saying the plan would involve the construction of four to seven new yards, probably located on the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf Coasts as far removed as possible from present shipyards in order to prevent labor shortages.

The ships desired were said to be of a type displacing about 14,000 tons and containing 4,000 tons of steel in the construction. The British were said to be specifying that they be powered by Scotch marine boilers and reciprocating engines, types which have not been built in the United States for 20 years but which are regarded as simpler to operate than the American high-pressure boilers and high-speed turbines.

Bank Loans Rise For Ninth Week

By the Associated Press

Another slight increase in commercial, industrial and agricultural loans, the ninth in as many weeks, was reported by the Federal Reserve Board yesterday.

In banks of 101 leading cities, these loans increased $3,000,000 to a total of $4,911,000,000 in the week ended November 27. This was, however, the smallest gain in the nine weeks during which the increase in the 101 cities alone has aggregated $336,000,000.

U. S. Exports Up 48 Millions For October

Largest Gains Shown By Canada, Japan, United Kingdom

By the Associated Press

Canada, Japan and the United Kingdom were credited by the Commerce Department yesterday with most of a $48,000,000 rise in United States merchandise exports in October.

October exports totalled $343,000,000, compared with $295,000,000 in September.

A geographical breakdown of October trade showed that shipments to Canada, swelled by airplanes, steel, corn, automobile tires, petroleum, machinery and cotton, reached $76,700,000 in October, the highest total for any month since 1929. September exports to Canada amounted to $63,300,000.

Shipments to Japan increased from $17,800,000 in September to $26,200,000 in October, due mostly to sale of more refined copper, gasoline (not of aviation grade, export of which has been restricted by the President), oil and machinery.

The United Kingdom boosted its purchases from $103,400,00 in September to $107,600,000 in October, taking larger quantities of airplanes, machinery, brass, bronze, cotton, petroleum and automobiles.

Most other American markets left open by the war also increased purchases somewhat, including Russia, Mexico, Cuba, Colombia, Chile and Brazil.

V. P. S. Hearing Again Delayed

For a second time, the Securities and Exchange Commission postponed yesterday a hearing on the application of the Virginia Public Service Co. for authority to absorb four subsidiaries.

Trial Examiner James G. Ewell said the delay was requested by both the applicant and the commission counsel. It had been set for November 27 and postponed until yesterday. No new date was set immediately.

The applicant seeks to absorb the Virginia Public Service Generating Co., the Hampton Towing Corporation, the Harpers Ferry Paper Co., and the Middle Virginia Power Co., all wholly owned subsidiaries.

Steel Output To Hit Record Rate of 96.9%

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Steel mills will boost operating schedules to 96.9 per cent of capacity this week from 96.6 per cent in the preceding week, the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today.

The higher rate indicated that this week would see the greatest amount of steel ever produced in a similar period.

A month ago output was at 96 per cent of capacity and a year ago 92.8 per cent.

Visible Grain Supply

New York, Dec. 2 (AP).—Visible supply of American grain showed the following changes from a week ago (in bushels): Wheat decreased 2,432,000; corn increased 1,331,000; oats decreased 68,000; rye decreased 305,000; barley decreased 153,000.

Boston Wool

Boston, Dec. 2 (AP) (U. S. Department of Agriculture).—The wool market in Boston was very quiet today. Quotations were mostly unchanged as compared with last week on domestic wools sold in Boston. Carload lots of mixed ½ and ¾-blood bright fleeces were being offered occasionally at around 45 cents, in the grease, delivered from the country to users, but there were no users showing any interest in these wools. Only a few inquiries were being received for South American wools.

Ladies' District League: No. 8

Galt Davis Is Proud of This Quintet

Judge Landis To Address Convention

Baseball Czar to Make Rare Appearance at Atlanta Meeting

By the Associated Press

Atlanta, Dec. 2.—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, baseball's shaggy white-haired czar, is going to make one of his rare public appearances during the Minor League Convention and the surprised bigwigs of the sport are wondering whether his talk will be social or business.

Earl Mann, president of the Atlanta club which is host to the thirty-ninth annual meeting of the minors, disclosed today that the fiery eyed commissioner had accepted an invitation to address the banquet Thursday night.

In his telegraphic response Landis simply said he would be glad to make "a few observations."

Talk Was Docile

Not since the convention was held in Columbus, Ohio, eight years ago has the judge appeared before the little fellows of the national pastime he rules. He usually has remained closeted in a suite, sometimes not even in the headquarters hotel.

His talk at Columbus was comparatively docile, impressing caution upon the club owners, but he precipitated one of baseball's most explosive off the field episodes some years before that by excoriating Branch Rickey, of the St. Louis Cardinals, in a speech at the minors' convention in Montreal.

A committee of the minors now is engaged in preparing a revised major-minor league agreement to replace the present pact which expires a year from next month. It is well known that the minors will insist in the new agreement that they get a voice in naming the 75-year-old commissioner's successor and they may also specify further limitations to his Government over them.

He Said "No"

At Cincinnati a year ago the minors voted for several amendments that would have curtailed his power immediately, but the two major leagues disagreed on them and Landis cast the deciding vote—a curt "No."

However, he will have no veto power over the agreement when it comes up for renewal next year. For this reason it is possible he may want to express himself on the action of the minors.

Major leaguers flocked to the scene today and held huddles in lobby corners, restaurants and rooms, but no deals were accomplished immediately.

Manager Lea Durocher of the Brooklyn Dodgers and Manager Frank Frisch of the Pittsburgh Pirates held a lengthy conference and Manager Casey Stengel of the Boston Bees buttonholed President Bill Benswanger of the Pirates behind a big pillar.

Breadon Arrives

Owner Sam Breadon and Business Manager Rickey, of the Cardinals, arrived by plane as another signal that the swapping season was officially open.

Warren Giles, general manager of the World Champion Cincinnati Reds, mingled with the crowd in the lobby but asserted he had no trades in mind and didn't think other clubs would be willing to give him additional strength.

Manager Del Baker, of Detroit's American League champs, held court sitting on the lobby steps and had a long talk with his new coach, Steve O'Neill. He had no trade worries, though, because of the American League rule passed last year prohibiting the pennant winner from making deals except by the waiver route.

Cavaliers Open Va. Cage Schedule

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 2 (AP).—The University of Virginia basketball team, which is expected to give Washington and Lee's Generals their closest scrap for the State championship, will launch the Old Dominion cage season in a game with Bridgewater here Wednesday.

Bill Harmon, center, and Bill McCann, are the veterans around whom the 1940-41 squad will be formed. Dick Wiltshire is the most promising sophomore candidate. Bill Weifley is another outstanding rookie and may win a starting guard job.

The Bridgewater game will be the only Cavalier appearance before Tennessee's Vols come here on January 4.

Greys Want Action

The Gibson Greys have recently organized a 135-pound basketball team and are booking games for the coming season. Challengers should call Doswell Olson at Chestnut 9683 after 6 p. m.

(Editor's note—This is the eighth picture in a series of ten devoted to the Ladies' District League. The Ladies' District League is composed of the leading women duckpin bowlers of Washington and vicinity and many of them have high national ranking as recognized by the National Duck Pin Congress. Galt Davis, of Rosslyn, is proud of his entry in the Ladies' District League who are, left to right:

GLADYS LYNN: who has been in the Ladies' District League four years and currently boasts of a 106 average; is married; good team member and good bowler and loves the game.

EVELYN NAYLOR: who is a 101-pounder and has a 109 average; been in Ladies' District 6 years; probably the steadiest bowleretie on team outside of Lucy Rose; always trying and never gives up; rolls a hook.

LUCY ROSE: who needs superlatives in describing her bowling and form; is married; has three youngsters; is near top in District with average of 122; places second in District ranking and fifth nationally; acting as captain her first year; been in league competition six years; rolls a straight ball; would rather have spares than strikes; seldom misses singles; teams up with Aster Clarke in mixed doubles and outrolls him; described by all bowlers, male and female, as a "honey."

BLANCHE WOOTTON: who is married; has average of 106; is Lucy Rose's doubles partner; in Ladies' District six years; very serious on the maplewayS; splendid form; wonderful team member and good competitor when running is against her; accurate and dependable.

THELMA ROBINSON: the "baby" of the team; married; her second year in Ladies' District League; has 104 average at present but will add several points to it before season is over; a real competitor; bowls a good hard, straight ball.

Chicago High School Eleven InvitedtoMiami

Miami, Fla., Dec. 2 (AP).—Coach Jesse Yarborough, of Miami High School, said tonight that Fenger High School, of Chicago, had been invited to play in the annual Christmas Day football game here.

Yarborough said Fenger had accepted pending a request of permission from the Cook County school board tomorrow.

Miami High, unbeaten and untied, is Florida State champion and plays Boys High of Atlanta, Ga., here Thursday night in a game billed for the Southern title.

Fenger won the Chicago City championship last Saturday by defeating St. Leo, 18 to 0, before 65,000 spectators. A crowd of more than 25,000 saw Miami High defend its State title by defeating Miami Edison, 28 to 7, last Thursday night.

The game, which has become one of the Nation's top postseason high school football classics in its 11-year existence, will bring together two teams with superb records.

Fenger has gone unbeaten through 37 consecutive games while Miami High hasn't lost in its last 25 regularly scheduled contests. The Miamians were defeated, 1 to 13, last Christmas Day, however, by Garfield, N. J.

Colored Elevens In Steel Bowl

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 2 (AP).—Two of the Nation's leading Negro football teams—Morris Brown, of Atlanta, and Wilberforce University, of Ohio—will clash in the first annual Steel Bowl game here January 1, promoters of the contest announced today.

Wilberforce is the ranking Negro team in the Midwest. Morris Brown rolled up an impressive record in the South this season.

A Steel Bowl committee composed of Birmingham businessmen are guaranteeing expenses of the contest.

Unbeaten Wilberforce seeks the national championship this Saturday in a game at Orlando, Fla., against Florida Agricultural and Mechanical College, while Morris Brown faces Kentucky State College at Frankfort in another season-closer.

Golden Gloves Attracts 165, Record Field

Annual Boxing Tournament Opens Friday at Arena

Shattering the previous record by 41, a field of 165 aspirants for boxing laurels will weigh in tomorrow at 7:30 p. m. at the Knights of Columbus Hall as a prelude to the District Golden Gloves tournament opening Friday night at Turner's Arena.

Dr. William Greaney, of the District Boxing Commission staff, will examine the contestants and direct the weighing-in.

The tournament will continue on Friday nights through January 10 and will see the return of several of the 1939 champions. Boys from almost a dozen local clubs and youngsters fighting independently will enter the novice and senior divisions.

Prizes to winners in each weight classification will be awarded in both divisions, while the winning seniors will get a trip to New York to compete in national finals.

Fighters from the Arlington Boxing Club, Capitol Heights Boys Club, Huron A. C., Pete's A. C., St. Mary's, of Alexandria, Merrick Boys Club, National Guard, Metropolitan Police Boys Club already have announced their intentions of entering the competition.

Giants Hire Hartnett as Player-Coach

for a catcher without an error, .452, during the period of August, 1938, to June 20, 1934.

In the 1932 World Series he accepted 38 chances in four games and had five assists.

Hartnett succeeded Charley Grimm as manager of the Cubs on July 20, 1938, and led the club into the World Series only to be beaten by the Yankees in four straight.

Stoneham said as far as he knew Hartnett would not come to Atlanta for the minor league meetings. Corriden, however, was expected to arrive tomorrow.

'I Ain't Talking,' Says Gabby Hartnett

Chicago, Dec. 2 (AP).—Gabby Hartnett accepted word tonight of his engagement by the New York Giants as player-coach with a pleasant, but cryptic, "I ain't talking."

Hartnett, former manager of the Chicago Cubs, declined comment when told by the Associated Press that Horace Stoneham, president of the Giants, said he would be kept on the active-player list for use in pinch-hitting roles and that John Corriden, former Cub coach, had been signed by the Brooklyn Dodgers.

"Thanks very much," said the garrulous Gabby, and hung up the receiver.

Another Boston Hockey Player May Join Service

For the second time this season the Boston Olympics may lose a star hockey player to American aviation. Buddy Foster, captain of the Dartmouth team last year, remained in Boston when the Olympics headed for Washington to take his final physical examination for admittance to th Naval Aviation Corps.

If Foster is successful in completing the examination in time it is reported that he will fly here for tonight's match with Washington.

Earlier this season Ralph Fortilin, an outstanding Olympics wingman, left the team to enlist in the Army Aviation Crops.

Greensboro May Enter Piedmont

Atlanta, Nov. 2 (AP).—Greensboro, N. C., is expected to replace Rocky Mount in the Piedmont League under sponsorship of the Boston Red Sox, League President Ralph Daughton indicated tonight in calling a business meeting for tomorrow. This would assure the Piedmont eight members again.

The Rocky Mount Club was supported by the Red Sox. Durham, another 1940 member, also may drop out of the circuit and efforts will be made tomorrow to interest the Brooklyn Dodgers in operating an eighth member. Lynchburg, Roanoke and Newport News, Va., have been mentioned as possibilities for the vacancy.

Man in the Iron Lung Loses His Fight for Life

Patient Who Won Many Friends by His Pluck Ends Year-Long Battle

The year-long battle for life that was waged by William Howard Cooke, the man in the iron lung at Gallinger Hospital, came to an end at 4:30 a. m. Sunday.

Funeral services for Cooke, whose fight to overcome infantile paralysis won him many friends here, will be held ot 1:30 p. m. Wednesday at the Deal funeral home, 4812 Georgia Avenue Northwest.

Mr. Cooke, who was 29 years old and lived at 1729 Bay Street Southeast, was stricken with infantile paralysis in November, 1939, and was placed in an iron lung borrowed from Naval Hospital.

From the outset, he accepted his lot gamely.

"It took a few days to get used to this contraption," he said then. "Lying on your back all the time was pretty tiresome at first. But now I feel comfortable."

Cooke was out of the hospital the following April, but continuing treatment. Then, Friday night, he suffered a relapse, had difficulty with his breathing. On Saturday he was back again, on his back in the long iron contraption that once before had sustained his life.

Cooke was a native of Arlington and served a four-year enlistment in the Navy. Prior to his illness, he had worked as a bus driver here. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Tacie Bair Cooke, and two children, Elizabeth Ann, 6, and Wilda Mae Florence Cooke, 3.

McNary, in Hospital, Is Reported Better

Salem, Oreg., Dec. 2 (AP).—Senator Charles L. McNary, taken to a hospital last Friday with the grippe, is doing "very nicely" and may be removed to his home Wednesday or Thursday, hospital attaches said today.

Col. McClellan's Funeral Services Held at St. John's

Notables from official and civic Washington attended funeral services in St. John's Episcopal Church at 2 p. m. yesterday for Col. George Brinton McClellan, son of the commander on the Union armies in the Civil War, who died Saturday in his residence, 2424 California Street Northwest.

The services were conducted by the rector, the Rev. Dr. C. Leslie Glenn, while in attendance were the assistant rectors, the Rev. Dr. Florian Vurpillot, the Rev. Dr. William White and the Rev. Dr. John Magee.

A vested choir under the direction of Arthur Howes sang "Rock of Ages" and "Onward Christian Soldiers."

The pallbearers were members of the vestry of the church where Col. McClellan was a senior warden. They included former Justice J. Harry Covington, Capt. John Edie, U. S. N., retired; E. R. Finkenstaedt, Admiral Horatio Gillmor, retired; Alanson B. Houghton, former Ambassador to Great Britain; William Mackall and Justice Owen Roberts, of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Col. McClellan will be buried with full military honors in Arlington National Cemetery at 11 a. m. tomorrow. The Rev. Dr. Glenn will conduct the burial service.

Col. McClellan served overseas during the World War and was mayor of New York City and a member of the House of Representatives from New York. He had been a resident of Washington since 1925.

Car Hits Culvert, Passenger Hurt

Charles Embrey, 22, of Potomac, Md., was injured slightly yesterday when an automobile in which he was a passenger collided with a culvert on the Darnestown Road, 1 mile west of Hunting Hill, Md.

Laurence M. Williams, 16, of Rockville, Md., was charged with reckless driving by county police. He told police he had swerved to avoid striking a truck. Embrey was taken to Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Spring by the Rockville Rescue Squad.

Luther D. Young Dies at Damascus Of Heart Attack

Luther D. Young, 53, well-known farmer and lifelong resident of Damascus district, died of a heart attack at his home yesterday.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ruth Maedora Young; two daughters, Mrs. Edgar Davis, jr., Rockville, and Miss Fannie May Young, Damascus; two sons, Harold B. and Ralph D. Young, both of Damascus; a sister, Mrs. Fannie Madigan, Washington, and a brother, Atwood G. Young, near Damascus.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. today at the Damascus Methodist Church, burial to be in the church cemetery. The Rev. J. E. Benson, pastor of the church, and the Rev. Raymond Hunter Brown, former pastor, will officiate. Mr. Young was for many years an active member of the Damascus Church.

Miss Belle Rankin, Funeral Tomorrow

Miss Belle Rankin, 50, Federal Housing Administration employe who was formerly executive secretary of the American Association of University Women, died at 5 p. m. yesterday in Doctor's Hospital. She had been ill for 10 days.

Miss Rankin was born in Petaluma, Calif., and was a graduate of Stanford University. She came to Washington shortly after the World War. After four years as a secretary with the Dictionary of American Biography staff, she took a position with the A. A. U. W. in 1927. She left that organization in 1933. She later joined the information service of the FHA.

Miss Rankin resided in the Park Lane apartments. Funeral services will be at 4:30 p. m. tomorrow at the Huntemann Funeral Home, 5732 Georgia Avenue. Dr. Harris Starr, retired Congregationalist minister, who was a former associate of Miss Rankin's with the Dictionary of American Biography, will officiate.

Following cremation, the ashes will be sent to Petaluma, Calif.

WORTH SEEING

We say this because we know that this unusually large home, less than 3 years old and in immaculate condition, is priced far below a comparable value on today's market. Containing all of the rooms and bath that you would desire, and in addition, a large breakfast room and a complete finished recreation room in the basement. Northwest Chevy Chase, Washington, is the location, and this home which we repeat is very low in price can be purchased on very easy terms. This home must be sold. Call Woodley 6678. J. CHEVY CHASE, D. C.

Facing Historical Fort Reno Park
Highest Elevation in the City
Beautiful 3 and 4 Bedroom Residences.

Special Conveniences:
Within 10 minutes drive from downtown.
Walking distance to city's finest schools.
Convenient to churches, transportation and shopping center.
Restricted and pleasing environment.
Unusual Opportunity Because:
The location and surroundings cannot be duplicated.
These homes were built in the summer months, which is the most economical and safest time to build.
They were completed just before the increase in wages and materials caused by the defense program.

The foregoing advantages and many other features enable the builder to offer the purchaser an opportunity to procure a home in an environment and at a price which cannot be equaled in homes now being built at prevailing and advancing prices.

The Post Radio Time Table

9:45 a. m., WMAL—Last night, in the glare of National Guard Anti-aircraft searchlights and with an American Legion guard of honor, Gordon Hittenmark opened his Christmas Dollhouse at the Willard corner. He'll air from there every morning until Christmas.

1:15 p. m., WOL—Former Ambassador to Chile, William Culbertson, makes a talk for the Mutual network.

3:15, WJSV—Mrs. Henry F. Grady, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, talks with Elinor Lee on the series of Latin-American lectures scheduled for the Shoreham.

6:45, WOL—Shades of the ASCAP-BMI battle: WOL offers three installments of "H. M. S. Pinafore," recorded by Harold Sanford and his troupe. Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays are the days for this new series.

8, WJSV—Two weeks ago tonight, the Court of Missing Heirs broadcast details in the case of the will of Mrs. Mathilda Lewis, of Long Branch, Calif., leaving her half-brother $1,200. She had last heard from him in 1933, but within a few days after the airing, the 73-year-old railroad boiler inspector of Fort Madison, Iowa, was found through letters and phone calls. Tonight he claims the bequest.

9, WMAL—Mady Christians, one of Austria's great stage stars, has made an enviable reputation as a capable American player. She's heard tonight in a Grand Central Station drama written especially for her.

9, WJSV—Nine years ago John J. Smith, a New York newspaper employe, had an operation which removed some of his vocal chords. During the past year he has been unable to make a sound, but Gilbert Wright has made a new speech-restoring invention, a matter suggested to him during his motion picture work. Smith's use of Wright's invention is the highlight of We, the People.

10, WMAL—Ice Hockey from the Riverside Stadium. For details, see this morning's sport pages.

In a world which in general is pretty dark, Max Wylie, CBS's director of scripts and continuity, has chosen to exemplify the lighter side of radio broadcasting in his new book, "Best Broadcasts of 1939-'40," which goes on sale throughout the United States today.

This is Wylie's second such anthology. In it 26 programs are reprinted as they were originally broadcast. But where last year stress was laid on the intellectual side of things in radio, this time he's culled out for the most part what he considers the best in comedy.

In these trying times, he points out, the two great forces of public information—radio and the press—are reflecting what he calls the very healthy side of "our vast and incorporated life together—the American sense of humor."

Wylie thinks American radio has it all over foreign brands. "English radio is a schoolmaster," he says. "German radio is a drill master. American radio is the reciting pupil of its own 130,000,000 tutors. In Germany, you take your radio and like it. In England, you take it or leave it. In America, you get what you ask for . . . This is healthy, this is sensible, this is fair."

"Best Broadcasts of 1939-'40" represents this best that the American people asked for, chosen from more than 6,000 scripts which Wylie laboriously mulled over. The majority were on the humorous side. As Wylie says, "No race is lost that can still laugh together at itself."
